Uvic Chief Orders Canada-First Hiring

By BOB MITCHELL

Department heads at the University of Victoria have been directed by the president, Dr. Bruce Partridge, to "pursue" Canadian students in graduate schools in Canada and abroad to fill open teaching positions.

The announcement of the drive to get more Canadian faculty members is coupled with a survey released Tuesday showing that less than half of Uvic's 385 faculty members are Canadian, and more than one-quarter are United States citizens.

Partridge said in an interview with the Times that he had met earlier this fall with department heads and deans and directed them to advertise all vacant teaching positions in academic publications across Canada.

•

He also urged them to make full use of Operation Retrieval, a project initiated by the federal government to attract Canadian students in foreign universities back to Canada upon completion of their advanced degrees.

Partridge described the faculty hiring situation on Canadian campuses as one of "Canadians versus non-Canadians."

"This university and all Canadian universities should have a distinctly Canadian flavor."

He said no figures have been set as to a good proportion of Canadian and non-Canadian teachers at Uvic.

"I think an arbitrary limit would be silly — on the other hand, to ignore the problem would be silly.

•

"In the natural sciences there is not a problem, in the social sciences there is."

The social sciences include sociology, anthropology, psychology, geography, economics and political science. Since human behavior plays a major role in all of them a Canadian point-of-view is considered vital.

However, at Uvic, as at many other universities, an analysis of the 82 social scientists according to citizenship shows U.S. faculty members as the strongest national group.

The representation is: U.S., 41.5 per cent; Canadian, 39 per cent; U.K., 15.9 per cent; and other countries, 3.6 per cent.

When the university is broken down into its three faculties, the 59-member education faculty

American Influence On Campus Growing

Analysing the international makeup of the University of Victoria faculty in two different ways turns up some surprising disparities as well as some interesting trends.

Trevor Matthews, economist and Uvic presidential assistant, classified faculty first on the basis of place-of-birth and then according to citizenship.

The following table, based on place-of-birth figures, shows one version of the pattern of changing national representation from 1960 to this year:

	Canada	U.K.	U.S.	Other	Total
1960-61	73.5%	17%	2.5%	7%	75
1964-65	44	27	18.5	10.5	205
1968-69	33.5	27	25	14.5	389
1969-70	33.5	26.5	27.3	12.7	385

According to the place-of-birth statistics only one-third of this year's faculty is Canadian, while just over half is made up of Britishers and Americans.

But a breakdown of faculty according to citizenship shows that 44.2 per cent are Canadian,

Ottawa To Open Docks?

(Times News Services)

OTTAWA—Labor Minister Bryce Mackasey told the Commons this afternoon that it was up to the cabinet as a whole to decide whether legislation should be brought down to force British Columbia dock strikers back to work.

The Vancouver Sun said it has learned Mackasey has given the strikers 48 hours to return to their jobs or face government action.

B.C.'s 3,200 dock workers Tuesday voted to reject the latest contract proposals worked out between their union representatives and the companies.

In the Commons, Mackasey refused to specify what actions he had in mind.

He said he was considering another trip to Vancouver this evening.

Andy Kotowich, Canadian-area president of the ILWU, announced the results of the vote Tuesday night but said he would have no further comment until after an executive board meeting called for this afternoon to discuss further policy.

E. M. Strang, president of the employers association, was not available for comment Tuesday night and he made no public statement this morning.

MAJORITY SAYS NO

Ninety-two per cent of union members voted on the newest proposals with 58 per cent of them against acceptance.

Believed to be the major stumbling block is the size of work gangs.

Earlier company proposals, approved by union negotiators, were rejected by 70 per cent of the membership two weeks ago. The dockworkers agreed then that a wage increase of 85 cents an hour, in a 27-month contract was satisfactory. Pre-strike base rate was $3.88 an hour.

Federal mediator William P. Kelly, who had been working with both parties to reach a settlement, said Tuesday night if the dockers expect a legislative settlement "they will have nothing to gain."

"I think the union executive and membership will have to do some soul searching and see what their own difficulty is. The membership has repudiated their negotiators who, I think, had done a pretty good job on their behalf."

MONTREAL DOCKERS WALK OUT

MONTREAL (CP) — About 2,000 Montreal longshoremen walked off their jobs today for a four-hour "study session" involving a merger of all longshoring unions on the docks.

The walkout, which affected some shipping, had been planned and agreed to by the shipping companies, a spokesman for the Shipping Federation of Canada said.

Nearly 1,500 longshoremen, members of the Local 375, International Longshoremen's Association, turned up for the study sessions at an east-end arena. They were to be back to work for this afternoon's shift.

Abstaining On China

OTTAWA (CP)—Canada plans to abstain again this year on the question of mainland China's admission to the United Nations, it was learned today.

The vote on Albania's resolution calling for the admission of Peking and the expulsion of Nationalist China is expected to be taken by the UN General Assembly in New York this Friday.

So far the government has carefully refrained from saying officially which way the Canadian delegation intends to vote on the issue.

External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp has repeatedly stated that Canada's position will be consistent with the status of negotiations in Stockholm on Canadian recognition of Peking.

Talks between Canadian and Chinese diplomats in the Swedish capital, aimed at establishment of diplomatic relations between Ottawa and Peking, have been under way for more than eight months.

The decision to abstain on the UN vote could be taken as an indication that no early agreement is anticipated in the Stockholm talks.

Mass March Ban Ordered

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government has rejected a permit for a mass march from the Capitol to the White House, November 15, to culminate what is being billed as the largest anti-war protest in history.

Only "a small symbolic parade" will be allowed, the justice department announced Tuesday night, citing "reliable reports" some demonstrators plan to "foment violence or to stage confrontations".

A department spokesman claimed "co-ordinated and effective law enforcement would be impossible" if "any serious violence" should erupt along the Pennsylvania Avenue route.

Immediately, the New Mobilization Committee, sponsor of the anti-Vietnam protests planned for Nov. 13-15, denied the charge and accused department officials of negotiating in bad faith.

"We vehemently deny," the committee said, "that any New Mobilization groups is planning activities . . . which are not legal and non-violent."

Some demonstration leaders earlier had forecast as many as 500,000 persons would take part in the massive protest.

TALKS POSTPONED

Two weeks of negotiations between the government and New Mobilization representatives broke off Monday because of a stalemate over the planned mass march finale.

But Ron Young, co-director of the project, suggested the department's refusal to allow a mass demonstration is a "delaying tactic" designed to make it "much more difficult for us to do all the necessary planning and co-ordination for the event."

"We are convinced," he said, "that we will be granted permits because we have the constitutional right to assemble and march on Nov. 15."

While rebuffing plans for the mass march, the government offered to permit a 40-hour "march against death," scheduled to start late Nov. 13 and end just before the major protest. That plan calls for 50,000 persons to march in files of twos from Arlington National Cemetery, down Pennsylvania Avenue in front of the White House and then to the Capitol grounds.

Also in Washington, the Senate foreign relations committee unexpectedly put off a decision today on whether to conduct public hearings on the Vietnam war.

Instead, Chairman J. W. Fulbright (Dem. Ark.) said, the committee agreed unanimously to ask State Secretary William P. Rogers and Defence Secretary Melvin R. Laird to testify during the week of Nov. 17 in closed session.

"Then we'll decide what to do subsequent to that," Fulbright told reporters.

The closed-door hearing planned with Rogers and Laird would come after the scheduled march on Washington by anti-war demonstrators.

But the chief reason for the timing, Fulbright said, was the fact that an inqury has been set for next week into the situation in Thailand, not the forthcoming anti-war demonstrations.

CLAIMING his victory "is a message from the people of New York they want the war in Vietnam to end," Mayor John Lindsay and his wife, Mary, are all smiles as he gets news of his re-election. (AP Wirephoto.)

'Show' States Go Republican

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Republicans have captured showpiece state elections with a Virginia upset and a New Jersey landslide, while New York Mayor John V. Lindsay fashioned a personal triumph and became his party's ranking free-lance politician.

President Nixon, who intervened as a campaigner, shared in the victories Tuesday which made a Republican the governor of Virginia for the first time in nearly 25 years and won the New Jersey state house after 16 years of Democratic rule.

Lindsay, a Republican but not a Republican nominee, won his three-way race with a plurality of more than 150,000 votes—a margin greater than he built four years ago to win his first term.

The victory gave new lustre to his credentials as a man with a potential future in national politics.

Cleveland Mayor Carl B. Stokes, a Negro, won over Republican Ralph J. Perk, who challenged his crime-fighting record, by about 2,000 votes.

A Democrat claimed victory in a New Jersey U.S. congressional election, but a recount loomed there.

Republican Linwood Holton captured the Virginia statehouse in the major upset of the elections, defeating Democrat William C. Battle by more than 50,000 votes.

WINS NEW JERSEY

Representative William T. Cahill, a six-term congressman, topped former Democratic Gov. Robert B. Meyner by 500,000 votes to win election as governor of New Jersey.

That victory delivered to the Republicans the last of the northern industrial states still governed by a Democrat, two-term incumbent Richard J. Hughes, who was ineligible for another term.

And the two victories gave the Republicans 32 governorships and left the Democrats with 18.

"One thing is evident in the two races," said Representative Rogers C. B. Morton of Maryland, the Republican national chairman.

'RESULTS BACK NIXON'

"In New Jersey, the Democrat made an issue out of the president's position in Vietnam and lost, and in Virginia the Republican made it an issue by backing the president and won."

Morton said that signalled a voter endorsement of the policy Nixon described in an election-eve report.

But Lindsay called his re-election as a Liberal-Independent "a message that the people of New York City want the war to end."

Lindsay defeated Democrat Mario A. Procaccino, the city comptroller, and John J. Marchi, the conservative who five months ago beat out Lindsay for the Republican nomination for mayor.

Education TV Delayed

OTTAWA (CP) — State Secretary Gerard Pelletier told the Commons today the government has decided not to pursue the development of a Canadian educational broadcasting agency "for the time being."

Boards Sworn to Secrecy After 'Defeated' Funds Allowed

By BOB MITCHELL

Seven B.C. school boards whose operating budgets were rejected last year in referendums were allowed by the government — "after they were sworn to secrecy" — to obtain extra funds through a form of deficit financing.

James Campbell, president of the B.C. School Trustees' Association, said Tuesday that when a surplus operating budget was defeated at the polls by ratepayers, the following arrangements were made:

The amount in excess of the 110 per cent of the previous year's budget — to which boards are entitled under the government's school finance formula — was taken off the budget and a loan made for that amount.

The loan was to be repaid simply by including it, plus interest, in the municipal budget of the district concerned this year.

"I'd like to be called a liar on this," Campbell said during an interview at the Empress Hotel.

"The school boards in the seven districts where the referendum failed have been sworn to secrecy that they must not tell of the arrangements that transpired after the defeat of the referendum."

Under the school financing formula, introduced in 1968, school boards are permitted a 10 per cent increase each year over their previous year's budget.

Any further increase must come out of municipal revenue and is subject to approval by either the municipal council or ratepayers in a referendum. The board may also appeal to the cabinet as a last resort.

Campbell led members of the BCSTA executive to Victoria to present the group's annual brief to Education Minister Donald Brothers. The two-hour meeting was attended by several senior department of education officials, including deputy minister Dr. Neil Perry and superintendent Frank Levirs.

Campbell said the department gave no indication it is dissatisfied with the referendum principle. Nor did he indicate what new legislation he plans for the 1970 session

'Duplication to End'

The president of the Union of B.C. Municipalities expressed approval today for the reported "green light" by Education Minister Donald Brothers for joint construction and operation of community facilities.

"If the minister has in fact given this proposal his blessing, a great deal of duplication of services can perhaps be eliminated," said UBCM president, Mayor Hugh Curtis of Saanich.

"This is all to the good at any time but especially in these days when money is difficult to find for public purposes."

The B.C. Schools Trustees' Association has also supported the proposal and a delegation which met Brothers Tuesday said the minister agreed on such joint school-community projects as swimming pools, gymnasiums and other recreational and educational facilities.

A strong UBCM delegation supported by regional district officials and members of the Municipal Officers' Association is meeting with Municipal Affairs Minister Dan Campbell about his proposed capital borrowing authority for local government.

emerges as the most strongly Canadian of all; Canada, 64.4 per cent; U.S., 27.1; U.K., 6.8; and others, 1.7.

On the other hand, the 26-member faculty of fine arts is almost one-half American. The representation is: U.S., 46.2 per cent; Canada, 26.9; U.K., 26.9; and others, none.

Partridge is in Ottawa this week attending the annual meeting of the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada, where the topic of "de-Canadianization" of the universities is expected to be a topic of serious, if informal, discussion.

Uvic not only has a smaller proportion of Canadians on its faculty than the national average (44 per cent as compared with 49 per cent across the country), but it is also one of two with American presidents; the other is Simon Fraser.

●

Partridge said he does not think his U.S. citizenship will prove a drawback to working at Uvic. He said earlier he will become Canadian if he is still here five years from now.

"I didn't leave my job at Johns Hopkins casually. I had enough work there to last me to retirement.

"I came to this university for a specific reason I knew there was some important work to do, and I wanted to play a part in getting it done.

"When you leave a country and come to another as a landed immigrant, that's a serious decision.

"If I get run out of office it will be because I've done a bad job, and if I've done a bad job, I'll deserve to be run out."

●

The large influx of foreign teachers to Canadian universities began in the early 1960s when growing popularity of the social sciences, together with a dismally small number of Canadian PhDs in the social sciences, forced universities to recruit abroad.

It was not until early this year that a serious campaign was started to check the increasing flow of non-Canadians into new teaching positions.

The campaign is being led by two Carleton University English professors, James Steele and Robin Mathews, who say the universities should have no less than two-thirds Canadian faculty members.

Some of their supporters advocate intervention of provincial education ministers and the federal immigration minister to enforce a quota, 21.6 per cent British, 28.8 per cent American and 5.4 per cent from other countries.

A close look at national categories when they are further broken down into various faculties reveals that the British and other groups are less numerous when classified by citizenship than by place-of-birth.

One explanation is that the faculty members from those two groups are taking out Canadian citizenship, which would account for the increase in the number of Canadians.

●

The opposite trend seems to be taking place in the American category, although to a lesser extent. For example, while 25.7 per cent of the 300 teachers in the faculty of arts and science were born in the United States, 27.7 per cent claim American citizenship.

At the same time, it should be noted that many senior faculty members who were born in the U.S. and elsewhere have spent most of their lives or teaching careers in Canada.

HIRE CANADIANS FIRST and to limit major sources of scholarship money to Canadian citizens.

Here are some of the figures they have used to back up their case: in 1961-62, 75 per cent of all university teachers were Canadian, but by 1968-69 they had dropped to 49 per cent.

The Canadian minority continues to shrink: of 2,642 new appointments made for the current year, only 362 — the smallest national group — were Canadian.

Some observers say Canadian students now unconsciously reflect attitudes of a colonized nation. A protest against the Vietnam war in the United States produces similar protests on Canadian campuses, even though the war is not a national issue here.

●

The hiring patterns established over the last 10 years may not prove easy to break. In a study headed by Steels and Mathews it was learned that at the University of Waterloo the academic vice-president, the dean of arts and his three assistants, and the chairmen of all eight departments in the humanities and social sciences are American.

In a letter to Waterloo president Dr. Howard Petch, Mathews said "every academic in Canada recognizes 'off the record' that grapevine hirings go out of Canada 'back home' and to friends.

"Canadian academics know that universities in Canada often refuse to advertise in Canada."

On the hazards of having a large proportion of departments Mathews said:

"A competent scholar from the U.S. (or elsewhere) who cannot make serious and profound reference to Canada ceases to be competent. If the larger part of a department is ignorant of Canada, they are not only incompetent, they are positively obstructive."

Private Medicare Carriers Scored

New Democratic Party house leader Dave Barrett today called for elimination of private medicare plan carriers.

He said the move should follow the provincial government decision to disclose payments made under the medicare plan to doctors.

Also to be disclosed will be the salaries of executives of private carriers such as MSA and CU & C, Barrett said.

"The present system where these carriers act merely as collection agencies for premiums is completely uneconomic and should be abolished," he said.

When the public sees what it costs for these carriers, pressure for their elimination will grow, he suggested.

EVEN FURTHER

But the government should go even further than that, he said, calling for:

Disclosure of all corporate salaries paid to non-hourly paid staff in both private and public corporations;

A full accounting of federal monies paid into the province's general revenue for the medicare plan;

And elimination of premiums for medicare, financing it from general revenue to ensure 100 per cent coverage for the people of B.C.

STEWART SUES RADIO FOR LIBEL

Ald. Ian Stewart has issued a writ against Island Broadcasting Co. Ltd. — owners of CJVI — and broadcaster David Abbott claiming damages for libel.

The writ was issued in the Supreme Court of B.C. on Oct. 27.

It claims damages for a "libel contained in a radio editorial" published by Island Broadcasting and broadcast and published by Abbot immediately after the 5:30 p.m. news broadcast over Radio Station CJVI on Oct. 17.

"For all further and other requisites, relief and for costs."

No date has yet been set for the hearing of the case.

Bill Scott's Final Fling

Promising to add color and controversy to the campaign, W. A. (Bill) Scott, perennial candidate for public office, announced Tuesday he will run for mayor in the Dec. 6 municipal election.

Scott said friends influenced his decision but described this election as his "final fling."

"They influenced me to offer myself as a candidate as fitting gesture to announce my retirement from involvement in local politics," he said in a release Tuesday.

The 71-year-old grandfather of five has been a veteran of numerous municipal and provincial elections in the 23 years he has lived in the area. His most recent effort was as an unsuccessful independent candidate in the Victoria riding in the Aug. 27 provincial election.

His platform is to get people out to vote and to create issues for decision he will list projects voters should vote against — not for — throughout the campaign.

'Expand Operation Retrieval'

A brief published by the University of British Columbia Graduate Students' Association says Canadians holding advanced degrees are not being given fair consideration for jobs in industry government or universities.

The brief, which is to be presented this week at the annual meeting of the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada in Ottawa, calls for an end to the two-year tax waiver for non-Canadian university teachers.

Other recommendations in the brief, which was written mainly by association president Art Smolensky are:

● Expansion of Operation Retrieval — the AUCC scheme to advertise academic positions to Canadians abroad — to publicize new jobs both at home and abroad;

Termination of government cutbacks in academic research;

● A minority recommendation that tenure not be granted to non-Canadian faculty members.

Canadians who take teaching positions at American universities also benefit by a two-year tax waiver. However, fewer Canadians are now going to the U.S. because of the unsettled social and political climate.

At the same time it is felt that due to the large influx of American faculty during the last 10 years, the tax waiver is no longer necessary as an incentive to attract academic manpower to Canadian campuses.

of the legislature.

The last of the 16 recommendations in the annual brief indicated the BCSTA intends to push for more public participation in education planning.

A recommendation taken from the Chant royal commission on education in 1960, calls for the creation of a school planning board "... to assess the changing needs of the public school system and to propose plans that are in keeping with such changing needs.

SMALL GROUPS

"... It should be a small-body composed of laymen rather than persons professionally connected with the public school system. ..."

"There's nothing in the Chant Report that is as current and as valid as this recommendation," Campbell said.

The school planning board would continually re-examine aspects of the school system, including its aims, and make recommendations on how to improve it.

This, said Campbell, is better than having a royal commission every 10 or 15 years to do a total re-evaluation of the system.

At present, major changes in the system are made by the Council of Public Instruction (the cabinet) on the recommendation of professional curriculum committees and special interest groups.

"None of them are specialists on public concern," Campbell said.

Campbell also announced the BCSTA has begun studying modular construction of schools as a means of cutting construction costs.

A five-man committee, composed of trustees knowledgeable in architecture and fiance is due to produce an interim report by Easter.

The concept of modular construction recieved Brothers' blessing during the BCSTA's annual convention in early October.

'BLOW YOUR SOUL NOT YOUR MIND'

Two American girls will be tossing an intriguing question to Victoria high scholl students Nov. 15: What about a heavy God trip?

They are members of a Seattle-based group called Youth Speaks, live in the hippie subculture and offer Christianity as an alternative to drugs.

Youth Speaks is an independent, non-denominational group which tries to relate to young people through their language, said Mrs. William Scott, of the Full Gospel Women's Fellowship.

●

The girls, Linda Meissner and Trena Layman, also run drop-in centres near hippie areas and high schools, she said.

"I think something like that would be a good idea for Victoria."

Young people would be able to drop in, buy soft drinks and listen to gospel music — "the kind they like, of course."

Knowledge that "parents are very aware and very worried about the drug scene in this city" prompted Mrs. Scott to invite the girls here. They will speak at Oak Bay junior secondary school at 7:30 p.m.

The Weather and You

By CARL RIBLET, Jr.

Anybody who has seen his child go into hemorrhage several days after an operation for removal of tonsils will tell you that it was a frightening experience. Fortunately, the number of tonsillectomy patients who experience hemorrhage are few, as little as 1-100th of 1 per cent.

Medical researchers, of course, worked long and hard before they made up their minds on the probable cause of hemorrhaging after a tonsillectomy performed under the greatest care in the best hospital. They blamed it on the weather.

The child who has just lost his tonsils must adjust when the temperature rises. His blood pressure decreases, the capillaries in the skin open as much as they can to help dissipate the heat, and then bleeding tends to increase. Medical records show that in each case of postoperative hemorrhaging, the temperature outdoors peaked during a warm front. The change in temperature, not the degree, was the significant factor.

Solidarity Forever Goes Up in Smoke!

Delegates Torpedo 'Bargaining Front'

By DENNIS BELL

VANCOUVER (CP) — Angry convention delegates Tuesday torpedoed a cornerstone of the British Columbia Federation of Labor's proposed "united bargaining front" after a stormy debate on administration.

"Solidarity forever" went up in smoke as 460 delegates to the BCFL's week-long convention threw out a report submitted by president Al Staley, secretary Ray Haynes and other officers.

The report included a review of the BCFL executive's handlin gof labor matters during the past year and outlined comprehensive plans for a future expansion of the federation's role in the collective bargaining process.

Staley was booed and heckled when he at first declared a motion to apporve the report carried on a voice vote. He relented and the motion was defeated in a standing vote by a five-to-three margin.

Forces backing Paddy Neale, militant president of the Vancouver and District Labor Council, interpreted the vote as a major setback for Haynes, who is up for re-election in the key secretary's post.

●

Neale announced Monday he would challenge Haynes in Thursday's federation elections. So far,

Neale has not put together a full slate to oppose the current officers, but some pro-Neale candidates were expected to be named later today.

In addition to handling of union matters, the current federation executive came under heavy fire for its failure to get the United Fishermen and Allied Workers' union back into the BCFL.

The UFAWU, with 7,200 members, has been trying to re-enter the parent Canadian Labor Congress and through it the federation for 12 years following suspension for alleged communist leadership.

Louis Kaufman, president of the Vancouver local of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, said the UFAWU controversy and other matters during the past year have damaged the image of the federation among rank-and-file workers.

"The role of the federation should be to coordinate and not to dictate," said Kaufman. "We've developed into a monstrous bureaueractic structure."

The federation's proposals for a "united bargaining front" of unions representing more than 100,000 workers whose contracts come up for negotiation next spring were also sharply attacked.

"We're all for a strong central labor body, but not one that forces policies through by coercion," said R. T. Buck Philip, international representative of the Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers Union.

●

He accused the federation leadership of attempting to villify former BCFL officers in its report and added that the plans for the bargaining front outlined by Haynes and Staley need much more clarification prior to approval.

Indications of a simmering dispute between the IWA, biggest union in the province, and the building trades unions rose to the surface Tuesday, in a resolution submitted by the IWA condemning Teamsters' Union raiding tactics.

It centres on jurisdiction over hauling of products to construction sites. The IWA claims the right, but the construction unions say it's their responsibility or that of the teamsters, who don't belong to the federation.

The convention was jittery with rumors that the building trades unions with 80,000 members, would pull out of the BCFL if the motion was approved.

The IWA and the building trades unions held a closed session Tuesday afternoon and the woodworkers agreed to withdraw the resolution.

An IWA delegate summed up the mood of Tuesday's convention in regard to the past year:

"It's been a history of repeat. We've been defeated by Bill 33 (The Mediation Commission Act) and I want a report that shows us how to win."

Wage Curbs 'Unfair Burden'

VANCOUVER (CP)—A Canadian Labor Congress executive said today the trade union movement won't be the whipping boy for the federal government on inflation and wants the same controls on prices that already apply to the wage-bargaining process.

Joseph Morris of Ottawa, CLC executive vice-president, told the 14th annual convention of the British Columbia Federation of Labor that proposals made by the federal Prices and Incomes Commission regarding wage levels placed an unfair burden on labor.

"It is obvious that the prime minister is looking for a whipping boy to explain away the economic difficulties he finds himself in," said Mr. Morris.

"Once again it is labor that is the target."

The CLC executive said his organization has persistently sought the fullest possible inquiry into causes of inflation. He said the Prices and Incomes Commission had been charged with this responsibility but had failed to take such action.

The commission has given no evidence of carrying out any of these instructions," he said. "There have been no indications whatsoever that it even attempted to analyze the causes of the difficulties."

CARRY LOAD

Mr. Morris said the commission chose instead to take the easy way out: "It came up with a ready-made remedy and once again it is the workers who are expected to carry the brunt of the load."

The commission had plenty to say about wage levels, but didn't come up with any ideas on executive salaries, professional fees, profits interest rates or real estate speculation.

He cited the collective bargaining process as a means of checking the validity of union wage demands.

The unions are required to justify their proposals through the process and "why shouldn't the people who control prices get the same treatment?"

Using the steel industry as an example, Mr. Morris said the United Steelworkers of America went through months of negotiations with the Steel Company of Canada at Hamilton, Ont., then an 81-day strike to win a wage increase.

"What happened next? The company announced a six per cent increase in its prices. And the union pointed out that because of greatly increased productivity in the industry the settlement would not necessitate a price increase."

Mr. Morris described the Stelco increase as an "inflationary act" that the company failed to justify. "The company officials didn't have to step outside their boardroom—they just arbitrarily slapped on a six per cent increase."

He noted that the commission had agreed to examine the Stelco situation after making it clear that no blame would be allocated.

"The union is pressing for an open inquiry, the employers objected most vigorously and it became clear that this was to be a closed-door inquiry," said the CLC vice-president.

Warts and All

THE FEDERAL GOVERNment's special report on Canada's official information services has heavy criticism of almost every phase of their operations, particularly those which portray the Canadian scene for overseas readers and listeners. There is contradiction, confusion and lack of policy, the study group says, with a "shambles" in the external affairs information services which "stumble through a stunning sort of chaos."

That is a pretty sweeping indictment of the system of news releases, policy statements, publicity hand-outs and departmental propaganda which has grown up over the past few decades. The confusion within the various sources of information about Canada is compounded by the multiplicity of offices which issue material and often work at cross purposes.

The report criticizes in particular the fuzziness and conflict in regard to just what the Canadian image should be for those who watch us from afar. It mentions, for instance, the CBC insistence on wheat fields, hockey, the Mounties, and Indians in ceremonial dress in its publicity abroad for Centennial year, while Expo sought to portray Canada as a modern state in the full tide of industry, scientific advance and urban development. While Canadian missions abroad were trying to explain and defend the controversial seal hunts, the government was announcing that abandonment was imminent.

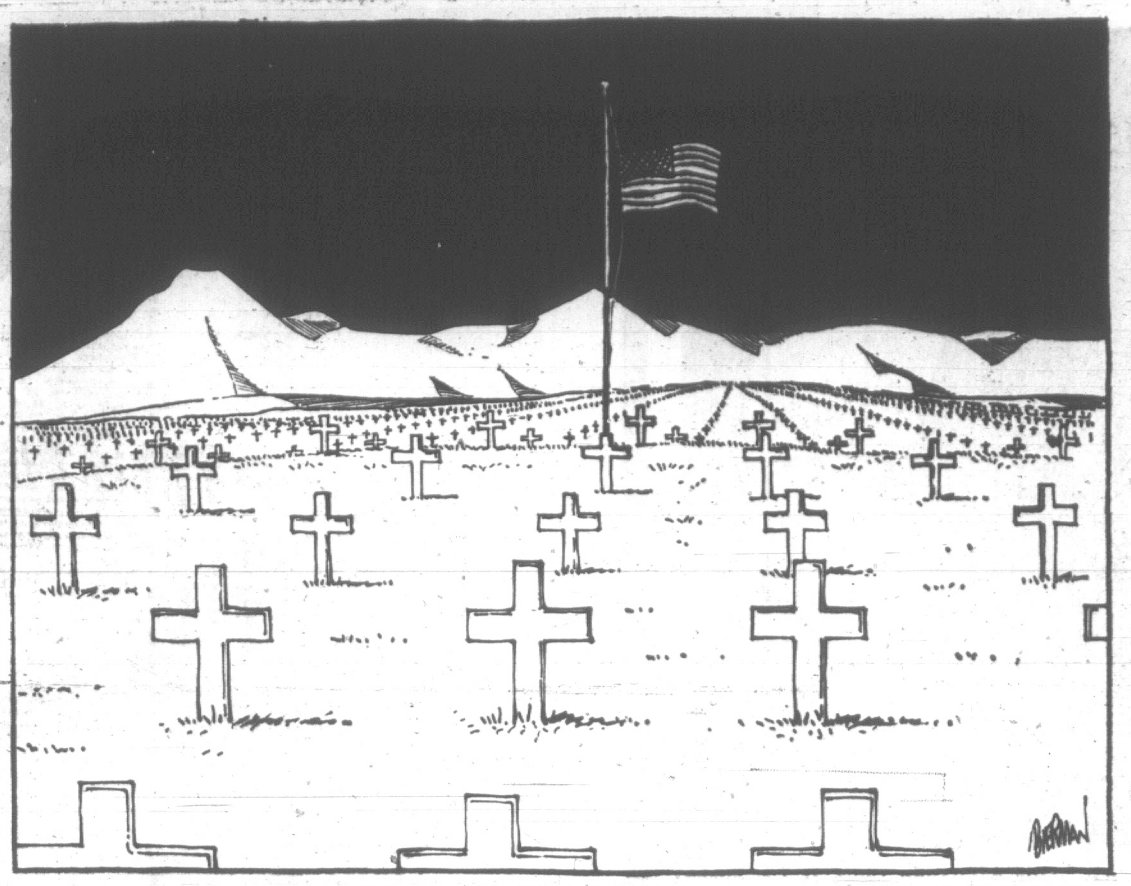
Perhaps the ironic truth is that the hodge-podge of conflicting pictures being sent abroad is in itself an accurate reflection of the changing, evolving, turbulent Canada of today. For to present this country to foreigners as a united, composed, shoulder-to-shoulder nation at this point in our development would be a complete fabrication and a false witness. There is a fundamental unity and strength that maintains us as a nation, but it is overlaid by conflict today while being forged into a new and viable structure through confrontations and dissent which are themselves a sign of the underlying life. In this phase, the mixup is the message.

It is interesting that the study group found offence in the continuing stress in Canadian publicity on Mounties, igloos, Indian dress and the traditional ice-and-snow theme. For this objection, on the national level, reflects exactly the same desire for transmogrification which is found, for instance, in Calgary's urge to abandon the heretofore carefully cultivated cowboy-rodeo-frontier-town image and emerge as a cultured metropolis; and Victoria's trend to reject the outworn bit-of-olde-Englande role in order to be known as an up-to-date Pacific Coast centre.

Yet all the component aspects are a part of the Canadian picture, and they cannot be completely lost any more than an individual can reject his forebears. Small wonder that government information services find difficulty in deciding what to publicize, when the ingredients of their publicity releases are changing their pattern like the colored fragments in a kaleidoscope.

The whole problem of government information services is difficult enough without such complications. At what point does an information service cease to be merely descriptive of the country and become an apologist, however subtle, for the government in power? How far should co-ordination and regimentation be carried in bringing all official information services under one control, and how can safeguards be built into such a system?

The study group's recommendation of a central agency, Information Canada, under a man of deputy minister's rank, to unify policy and eliminate conflict between departmental information services, is an attempt to achieve some order from the existing "chaos". But it carries dangers within itself which will call for still more watching by the public whose national image is the cause of all the concern.



"The Silent Majority"

No Rules—Eventually No Fish

FISHERIES MINISTER JACK Davis sounds the tocsin with justifiable vigor when he tells Canadians of the large foreign fleets overfishing the high seas adjacent to Canada's 12-mile fisheries limits. He says they have over-exploited some species and threaten others of vital concern to domestic fishermen, and he calls for action, perhaps at the United Nations, to set rules adequate to meet conservation needs.

"As far as they (massive foreign fishing fleets, state-owned and operating with almost military organization) are concerned there are no rules in this game—certainly, there are no rules yet. It is a matter of first come first served and heaven help the hindmost," the Canadian minister says. The fleets, "are hitting our resources . . . so hard that many of them may never recover."

Mr. Davis names Russian, Polish and East German ships as the offenders—and his description of fleets he has seen off Vancouver Island suggests that their design and magnitude have been determined in a manner to make them suitable for this very type of fishing—something with which individual Canadians in smaller boats cannot compete.

So much for the situation. What about the remedy? Canada's fisheries minister feels that Canada must press for effective international management of marine resources out to the limit of our continental shelf. He urges strong representations to that end at the next law of the seas conference.

This seems the most logical approach to the problem. It is unrealistic to ask a foreign country to reduce the efficiency of its fish-catching methods on the high seas so that catches will be better for nearby domestic fishermen. Some more compelling argument is required.

Such a case is not hard to develop. If these big foreign fleets, operating in an area where legal rules do not apply, can be persuaded that they are fishing various food sources to extinction and that a continuation of this practice will leave everyone hungry, then the argument becomes persuasive.

Mr. Davis no doubt recognizes this and for that reason proposes the approach to the United Nations. Only through international convention will the danger of destroying the resource be reduced.

The Permanent Plate

THE GOVERNMENT'S DECISion to issue a three-year licence plate for British Columbia cars next year is a step toward the adoption of a permanent licencing system. The authorities explain that they wish to continue experiments and investigations into durable metals, methods of display and positioning of the plates on cars before making a final decision.

Obviously what is required is a plate made from material which will last the lifetime of a car, be clearly and easily identified and be so placed that it will not be subject to disfigurement or obliteration as many bumper-fastened licences are now.

The last point suggests an approach to manufacturers. They are in a position to design a plate area on the front of a car—most automobiles now have a satisfactory space on the back—where a bump against some obstruction will not so mutilate the plate that it becomes illegible. And since most North American plates are of a standardized size, the problem should be of little difficulty to the car-makers.

FROM TORONTO — By HAROLD GREER

To Cut the Price of Medicinal Drugs

THE Ontario Department of Health appears to have hit upon an ingenious scheme for lowering the price of prescription drugs while at the same time increasing quality control. The "Comparative Drug Index", which will be sent to all doctors in the province some time next year, will enable a physician to prescribe the lowest-priced brand of a drug for a patient, knowing it to be just as good and as safe as the most expensive brand.

Greer

By taking the prescription to an "approved pharmacy" for dispensing, the patient will be assured he is paying no more than the price quoted in the index, plus the pharmacist's dispensing fee.

None of this will have the force of law behind it but the program is being constructed so as to demand the co-operation of the drug manufacturers and distributors, and the pharmacists, in their own self-interest. It will work this way:

The index will list those drug products most commonly prescribed (covering about 90 per cent of prescriptions) according to category-antibiotics, oral contraceptives, intravenous solutions, etc. — and generic name. Each sub-group will consist of the brand-name products available, listed according to price, the price being expressed as so much per standard measurement.

Quality Guarantee

The physician who consults the index will have the assurance of its compilers — The Drug Quality and Therapeutics Committee of Ontario — that the brands within each sub group are of equal quality and that one is as good as another. He will therefore be able to prescribe the cheapest product if he wants to.

The committee, appointed by the provincial government, consists of Dr. A. E. Dyer, chief of the Drugs and Biological Service of the Department of Health, and eight members from the major teaching and professional centres in the province. The chairman is Dr. W. T. Clark of the University of Toronto.

The Committee has taken the optimum standards recommended by the federal government's Food and Drug Directorate as its yardstick and has done its own research and investigation to see that the products going into the index meet those standards. It is no great secret that a number of drugs have been rejected on quality grounds and some well-known products will be missing when the index is published.

Thus, not so incidentally, the index will tend to reinforce the federal government's quality control program.

Although rigid tests are performed of every new drug before its release for clinical trial is permitted, it is not practical and perhaps not possible to test every batch of products in production, or being imported. The random sampling method must be used and this has its hazards. The Ontario program will therefore make manufacturers and importers even more quality conscious—especially those who are using chemicals from Hong Kong, eastern Europe and, in the words of one official here, "God knows where".

Doctors, of course, will not be limited in their prescriptions to products listed in the index but it seems clear that a brand not on the list is unlikely to have much standing with the medical profession as far as quality and safety are concerned.

Similarly, it seems clear that the higher-priced brands will be hard put to justify themselves without the quality argument to fall back on. A manufacturer will no longer be able to say his product is twice the price of Brand "X" because it is twice as good, if Brand "X" is listed in the index as, by definition, just as good.

Far-Reaching Effects

This should have some far-reaching effects on drug merchandising. It is no accident that the most expensive drugs tend to be the most advertised drugs: their producers spend huge amounts promoting them with the doctors through slick brochures, samples and "detail men." None of this information, however, ever mentions price and the doctor, not surprisingly, tends to respond only to what he is told.

Yet the range in price can be very marked. The legislature's health committee was told, for example, that six brand products of tolbutamide, used in the treatment of diabetes, ranged from 6.84 cents to 1.5 cents per standard tablet. All were of equal quality.

Manufacturers and distributors will therefore have to think very hard about the prices they quote for the index and some prices undoubtedly will be reduced because of it.

The price quoted in the index will be the maximum price to the druggist who, if he is an "approved pharmacist", will pass it on to the customer without mark-up, simply adding his dispensing fee, which will be standard for all prescriptions. Such pharmacies will display a local seal of approval from the Ontario Pharmacists' Association in their windows and will contract with the association not to charge more than the index price, plus dispensing fee, on pain of losing the seal.

To Check Raises

This, it is hoped, will mitigate against manufacturers and distributors quoting a price for the index and then raising it a month later. In such case, the pharmacist will be bound by his agreement not to buy at the higher price and will perforce be unable to fill prescriptions for the product. The index will be revised every six months to account for new prices and new products.

Two question marks, however, cannot be resolved at this stage. One is the psychological factor, for both doctors and patients, in prescribing the cheapest product. There may well be a disposition to think that if it's cheap, it can't be very good, despite its inclusion in the index.

The other is the real effect on the prices the patient actually pays. This will depend largely on the standard dispensing fee to be adopted, an amount still being negotiated by the pharmacists.

Checking CBC

The Globe and Mail

FEW countries in the world are prepared to subsidize their own dissolution from the public purse. It is hardly premature, therefore, that Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau should finally have called for an end to the use of the CBC French-language network to purvey separatist propaganda.

The use is not merely suspected and it is not new; and CBC President George Davidson should not try to deny it. Complaints about the excessive influence of separatists and separatist sympathizers in the French network have continued for years, prompting the legislative requirement that the CBC pursue a policy that promotes Canadian unity. The situation that existed even thereafter can perhaps best be demonstrated by one episode.

In January, 1968, CBC Vice-President Marcel Ouimet wrote Jean Grand-Landau, in charge of news and public affairs for the French network: "The cup was full. Today it overflows. I find this morning on reading the report on the January 17 co-ordination meeting that Rene Levesque, chief of the Mouvement Souverainete-Association, is to be the guest on 2 plus 1 (an interview program) January 21 . . . Option-Quebec (Mr. Levesque's book urging separatism) has been the object of improper publicity for a week on Couche Tard (another interview show). The day of publication, that is Wednesday — and it was legitimate — the radio news . . . the television news . . . as well as the program Aujourd-hui (interview) reported on the publication of the work . . ."

Mr. Ouimet pointed out that no such flood of publicity had followed the publication of books by other Quebec politicians, such as Daniel Johnson and Eric Kierans.

★ ★ ★

Separatist acts are news and should be reported as such. Distortion of news, entertainment, and public affairs programs, to sell separatism, is a totally different thing. In Mr. Ouimet's words, it is "managed news", "brainwashing" and "organized propaganda" and we would be fools if we continued to pay for it.

It is encouraging that Mr. Trudeau has decided that we shall not continue to pay for it. On two occasions recently he has warned that if the promotion of separatism is not ended on Radio-Canada, its budget will be cut. That is reasonable; it is also in conformity with legislation governing the CBC.

What is not reasonable is Mr. Trudeau's second idea, that the government might take the Quebec network into trusteeship, that is, run it directly:

We suspect that after considering the matter Mr. Trudeau himself will find that it is not possible.

What makes it impossible is the intolerable precedent it would set. An intervention now could be clothed in the virtue of eliminating separatist controls over Radio-Canada. The next intervention could be by another government, bent on using the CBC as its propaganda tool; and that we are not going to have in Canada. It is the sort of thing that belongs only in banana republics that have been taken over by military coup.

Mr. Trudeau does not need to adopt such undemocratic measures to achieve his very proper end. If CBC separatists and separatist sympathizers do not stop trying to split the nation, their budget can be cut off. Mr. Davidson and Mr. Ouimet can be commissioned to rebuild Quebec networks that will report the news objectively.

It isn't necessary to protect today's freedoms by destroying tomorrow's.

A Deforming Spray for Vietnamese

By FRANK MANKIEWICZ and TOM BRADEN from Washington

THOSE who are concerned over a possible massacre—even of women and children — in South Vietnam when U.S. troops depart might consider the fact that we now spray enormous amounts of an anti-crop chemical throughout South Vietnam which has been known for three years to cause deformed births in test animals — at a rate of 100 per cent.

At least four newspapers in South Vietnam printed stories — and pictures — last summer of deformed babies born in villages sprayed with the chemical (called 2,4,5T), and the newspapers were promptly closed down by the Thieu government for "interfering with the war effort."

Use of the chemical, described by our government as "probably dangerous," is now banned in "populated areas" and on or near food products in the United States, but the Pentagon announced last week that it would continue to use it in Vietnam, where Army Service Manuals set forth its appropriate use against food supplies.

In Drinking Water

In addition, it is widely used in areas where the population captures its drinking water from rain, by the use of roof gutters and barrels, and where wells are sunk into soil saturated with the chemical.

This chemical, along with other herbicides and defoliants, was developed by the army at Fort Dietrich, Md., in the 1950s, and it quickly found acceptance in agriculture. After an early refusal to do so, the United States began to "defoliate" in a small way in Vietnam in 1963, and they also sprayed 741 acres of rice — a program to "deny" the VC the crop (i.e., to starve the families who lived there).

But by 1967 we attacked 221,000 acres of crops and were defoliating nearly 1.5 million acres in Vietnam and — to be sure — in Laos. There was only a slight drop in 1968.

Bitter 'Orange'

Army Training Circular TC 3-16, dated April, 1969, describes the "anti-plant" chemicals along with what are called "riot control agents." Specifically, what is used in Vietnam is called "Orange," a 50-50 mixture of 2,4,5T and another defoliant called 2-4D. Troops are instructed to spray it on "mangrove or highland trees or broad-leafed crops (such as beans, corn, bananas and tomatoes) and rice." "Orange" and other chemicals are described as having a "high offensive potential" to destroy food supplies and to deny the enemy food by rendering the soil sterile.

Just how high an "offensive potential" this chemical warfare had was not really known until 1966 when, for the first time, the National Institutes of Health commissioned tests on pregnant animals.

The study showed that severe malformation of offspring occurred in rats at the rate of 39 per cent — as against a normal rate of 10 per cent — when they were given a small dose. When this dose was increased to the level a Vietnamese woman might consume in a few days in her drinking water, the rate of fetal malformation rose to 90 per cent and beyond.

Thalidomide Reminder

Whether the rate of human malformation from contact with his chemical is greater or less than with rats is, of course, unknown. In the case of Thalidomide, it turned out to be greater.

It was this that prompted the finding that 2,4,5T was seriously hazardous and "probably dangerous" and caused its removal from the domestic market in the United States. The President's science adviser, Dr. Lee du Bridge, perhaps adumbrating the Pentagon's refusal to cut down its use against Asians, said only that the rate of fetal malformation was "greater than expected." If you expect 10, one would imagine that 100 would rate stronger language than "greater than expected."

What amazes the scientists who discovered the report only by chance is that for 15 years no thought was given to testing the chemical on animals, that for three years a finding of "probable danger" was ignored or hidden and that we continue to use it in Vietnam against the civilian population.

Not since the Romans salted the land after destroying Carthage has a nation taken pains to visit the war upon future generations.

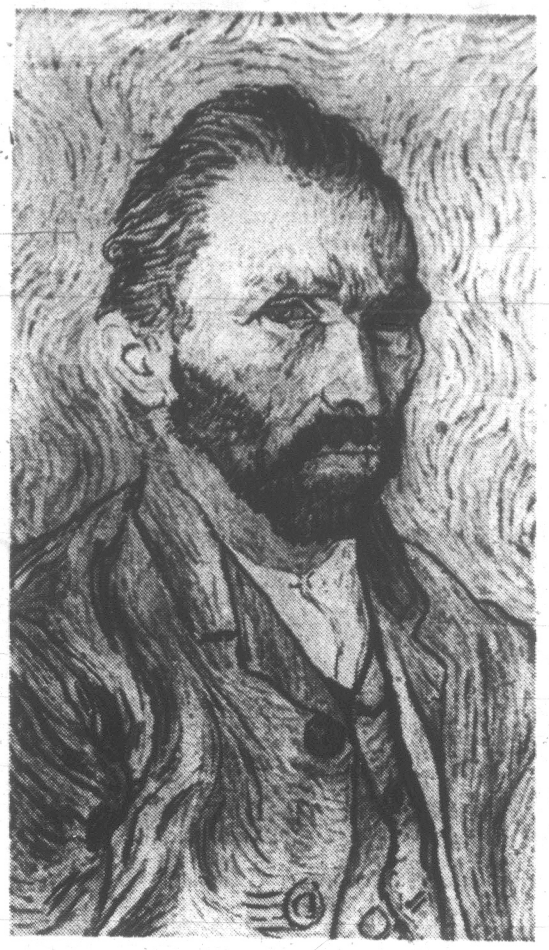
DENNIS THE MENACE

Looking Back

From the Times of Nov. 5, 1909:

Liberals of Saanich last night elected Thomas A. Brydon to contest the constituency in the Liberal interests against D. M. Eberts, the Conservative candidate in the forthcoming provincial election. The choice was made unanimously at a large meeting of electors. John Oliver, leader of the Liberal party, was present before the ballot was taken and was roundly cheered when he rose to give his election address.

What Was Ailing Van Gogh?



Self-portrait by Vincent Van Gogh.

THE MEDICAL POST

Was Vincent Van Gogh suffering from schizophrenia or was he an epileptic? This business of trying to diagnose the illnesses of famous personalities of the past is a fascinating game which physicians often play and it can be a sharp test of diagnostic ability.

Dr. Angel A. Monti, of Argentina, is one physician who plays this game expertly. His subject is the artist Vincent Van Gogh.

At the recent International Neurological Congress in New York, Dr. Monti drew a bigger audience than most of his colleagues who spoke on more serious subjects when he examined the life of Van Gogh and concluded that tormented Dutch master was more likely a victim of epilepsy than of schizophrenia.

Dr. Monti made a strong case for his epilepsy theory. He contends Van Gogh could not have had schizophrenia because although his behavior at times was bizarre he was always coherent and his paintings were representational right up to the time of his suicide.

In Van Gogh's letters to Theo, his brother, he often mentions hearing strange voices and Dr. Monti points out that this is consistent with experiences of epileptics during seizures.

●

It is easy to trace the changes in Van Gogh's personality during his life and here again these are consistent with what used to be known as the "epileptic" personality." Modern authorities on epilepsy, of course, now reject the existence of an epileptic personality.

One needs only to look at Van Gogh's paintings to see the evolution in technique. The early paintings were careful, detailed, typically Dutch interiors (The Potato Eaters).

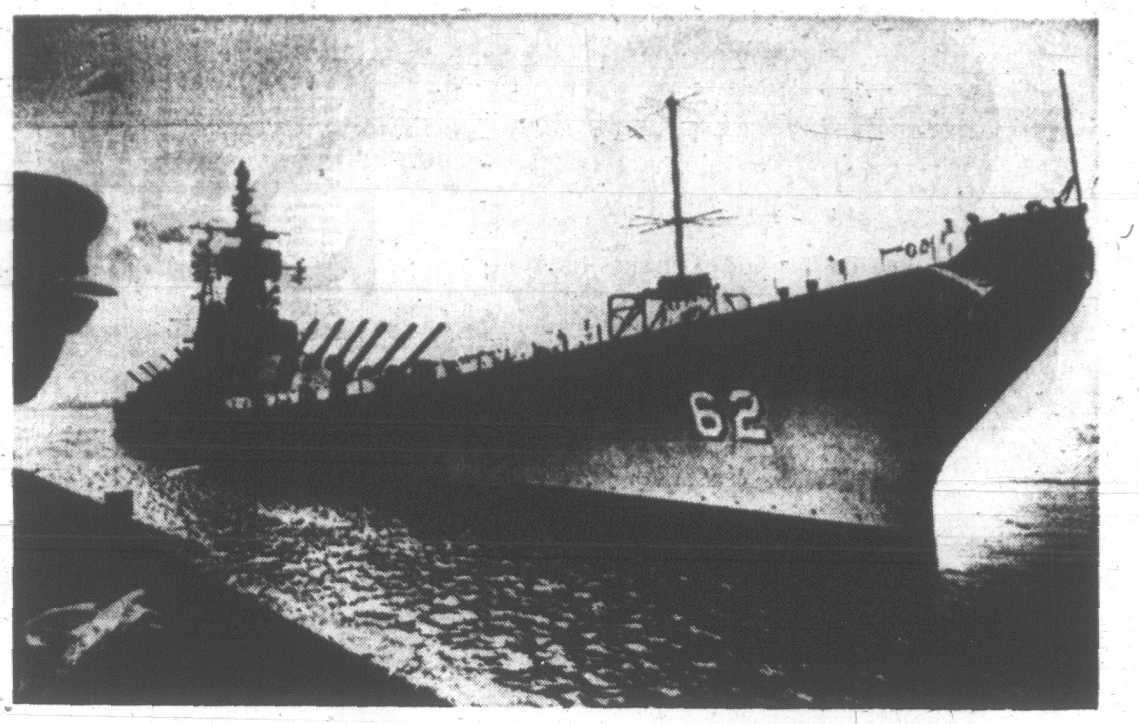
Later the technique was broader, more impressionistic. Some of this undoubtedly came from his association with the French impressionists.

But Dr. Monti makes a good point when he suggests that perhaps the changes were not all caused by his contacts with Gauguin and other impressionists.

There is evidence that Van Gogh suffered from psychomotor abnormalities and these may have caused some perceptual changes consistent with epilepsy.

But there are some wide gaps in Dr. Monti's hypotheses. Could the perceptual changes have been caused by the heavy consumption of absinthe? It is a possibility.

It seems to be significant that when he was put in an institution at St. Remy he continued to paint and his paintings were not the familiar abstractions which later schizophrenic painters have done in the acute stage of the disease.



Reactivated New Jersey bound for Vietnam in 1968.

$100 Million for the Battleship Buffs

THE NATION

The price for taking the battleship New Jersey out of mothballs, sending her to Vietnamese waters for a month, and then putting her back in mothballs was about $100 million.

What's $100 million? In the New York Times a physician protesting against the SST project compares its cost with that of a research centre for the treatment of burns which is being disbanded because the government feels that it must save $250,000.

●

Using the same yardstick, the New Jersey episode would pay for 400 such centres. "How shall we account to our children for this set of values?" the doctor asked.

That leads one to ask why the New Jersey was exhumed. Lee Dye gives the answer in the Los Angeles Times.

Initially at least, it was chiefly a matter of sentiment. In the summer of 1966, in San Diego—where retired admirals and lesser naval personnel abound—a group of such pensioners met to recall the past.

The common bond was that they had all served on battleships, and their forgathering was as natural, and seemingly as harmless, as the annual meeting of the survivors of the great Northeastern blizzard of 1888. In the end, though, it poured $100 million down the drain.

The principal speaker, Marine Corps Brig.-Gen. James D. Hittle, now assistant secretary of the navy for manpower and reserves, delivered an eloquent address to the old sailors. Don't memorialize the battleship, was his plea, put it back into combat. The American Battleship Association did just that.

●

The Chief of Naval Operations deplored the venture, but he was circumvented. Secretary of Defence Robert McNamara was initually opposed, but the under-secretary of the navy (the office of the secretary was vacant at the time) requested authority to reactivate, not mentioning the views of the CNO.

The American Battleship Association had mailed 6,000 pieces of literature urging recipients to write to their congressmen.

●

Within the navy there was a great deal of professional opposition, but external pressure was heavy and, perhaps most important of all, Sen. Richard B. Russell, chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, was in favor. Anyway, the cost of reactivation was to be only $23 million.

The equipment of the New Jersey was modernized, some retired navy men were recalled to active service because no one else knew how to manage 16-inch guns, and an old navy gun factory in Idaho was put back in service to make 33 spare barrels, which were shipped to the Far East at a cost of $60,000 each.

By the time the 45,000-ton warship was ready for combat, the cost of reactivation had mounted to $50 million.

She was recommissioned at Philadelphia on April 6, 1968, and left for Long Beach, Calif., stopping at way ports where great crowds viewed her and the navy public relations officers had field days.

Finally she cruised off the coast of Vietnam, firing at suspected hostile installations on both sides of the demilitarized zone.

But after a month the bombing of North Vietnam was halted, and this target practice ended.

●

The New Jersey hung around South Vietnam for a while, but there was nothing for her to do and she was sent home into retirement.

It had cost a lot—$100 million is probably a conservative figure—but the battleship buffs had had one more moment of ecstasy, before they too go permanently into mothballs.

'In Age of Tenors, Sing Bass'

By RICHARD J. NEEDHAM

I'd like to have said about me what was said about a onetime editor of the Saturday Evening Post, "In an age of tenors, he always sang bass."

What's education but a continuous exposure to the widest possible variety of people, places, ideas, problems and situations? How many of the young people are getting it? Or have the guts to go out and get it?

Simple English is always the best, and doesn't necessarily come from English professors. One of the great, strong sentences in our language is the opening line of W. C. Handy's St. Louis Blues —"I hate to see that evening sun go down."

Someone older than me (even older than me) complained the other day, "Nobody wants your when you're old." I asked, "But isn't that one advantage of being old? Nobody wants you, nobody expects anything from you, so you are free. You can be your own self and live your own life, and watch younger people making all the mistakes you made, and cackle with glee as they fall flat on their faces."

Continue to Rise

The interpretation I put on Pierre Trudeau's anti-inflation encyclical is that government spending will continue to rise, taxes will continue to rise, wages will continue to rise, prices will continue to rise. And since that (I think) is the interpretation most people will put on it, that's inevitably what will happen. Inflation comes when people expect inflation; and after 30 continuous years of it, they can't expect anything else.

I wouldn't give anyone a character reference unless I knew him well; but if I knew him well, how on earth could I give him a character reference?

Jacquie Tennant, 22, tells me she was walking down a main street in Peterborough this summer — barefoot, miniskirt, big floppy hat. A man stopped his car by her, opened the window, shouted, "You ought to be banned!," closed the window and drove on.

Churchill offered people blood, sweat and tears. Garibaldi offered them wounds, hardships and forced marches. The Liberal Party of Canada (through a newspaper advertisement) invites them to "join in participatory democracy," by sending a stamped, self-addressed, business-size envelope to an address in Ottawa.

When a man and a woman promise to be completely-honest with each other, that's the first big lie; the rest will automatically follow.

There's no Cure

H. L. Mencken: "It must be confessed that man's inhumanity to man is almost intolerably distressing. It is the thing that all decent people chiefly complain against in this world. Unfortunately, no workable cure for it has ever been discovered. It seems to be inevitable for all men, after they are put in positions of authority, to exercise it in a brutal and inequitable manner. There is little choice here between one man and another, but if any difference can be demonstrated it probably stands to the credit of what are generally regarded as immoral men. The moral bully is the worst of all. Puritanism is completely merciless."

I wish women would stop referring to themselves as being "only a housewife." The most interesting women in their 40s and 50s who have done some child-raising, some reading, some thinking, some living, and have come out of it with real, amusing and attractive personalities. It's their husbands who are generally from Dullsville.

Simone Weil: "Men owe us what we imagine they will give us. We must forgive them this debt."

Let Pope Do It

There's talk about Britain intervening to restore peace in Northern Ireland. It's my personal view that the Pope should be given the job. He's a man of peace, he's always holding forth about it, here's his chance to turn his preaching into practice.

Wallace Stevens: "It may be that one life is a punishment for another, as the son's life for the father's. But that concerns the secondary characters. It is fragmentary tragedy within the universal whole. The son and the father alike and equally are spent, each one, by the necessity of being himself, the unalterable necessity of being this unalterable animal."

Everybody denounces "the greedy capitalist"; but it's my observation that Toronto prospers precisely because it has so many of them, the Maritime provinces languish because they have so few. Were I called upon to assist the Maritimes, I'd send down not a twittering choir of social reformers, but a bull-throated gang of robber barons.

The easiest women to get along with are the ones who wear men's pajamas.

Winter Discontent and The Sins of Omission

By ART STOTT

"This," said the lady of the house, "is the season when your sins of omission catch up with you." She was gazing from our dining nook through what we call a picture window that gives on the back border, the lawn, the Strait and the Olympics beyond.

Stott

But she was not seeing the majesty of the mountains in their changing moods, nor the sea which seldom sleeps. The dull gray of a rainy November day shut out the vista, limited her view to the shore rocks where two dejected shags kept silent vigil with a hunch-necked gull. And when she lifted her eyes to the point whence should come hope, there was no inspiration.

"The gutter's dripping", she pointed out. "Remember your plans to put up new downpipes? You were talking of plastic. All that's holding those conduits together is rust and faith. When the gales rush in from the south, you're going to have broken tubes of perished galvanized iron decorating the lot and the water that doesn't spill over the clogged gutters is going to seep through the plugged escape hole to wash off the paint on the side of the house.

"The run-off from the roof will collect in two pools, one at the base where the drain tile should be running free and isn't, the other across the sidewalk on the lawn and we'll have that grey-yellow patch where it drowns the grass.

★ ★ ★

"This", she said, with brilliant originality, "is the winter of my discontent."

"I'll get around to it", I told her.

"Of course," she said, "Before you write the great Canadian novel you were getting around to starting 30 years ago, or after? Why don't we hire somebody to do these jobs?"

"It's a matter of pride," I explained. "A man fixes his own downspouts, clears his own drains, does small things around the house. It's important. It's part of the business of being an active home-owner."

"I will not nag," she declared. "I will not injure your pride. But when is all this going to take place? What has happened to those splendid plans you outlined in spring?"

"Why", I said, "I dug the garden and planted it. We had the best crop of green peas we've ever had. Our beets were small, but sweet. The radishes, lettuce and onions were never better. The early spinach came along fine."

"Stop there for a minute", she said. "You did very well on the garden. But we pulled the pea vines in July, dug out the spinach roots in August, finished the beets in early September and the radishes, lettuce and onions had gone long before. This is November. It is later than you think."

"I have a problem" I said. "My ladder won't reach the gutter. I've been intending to borrow one, but I haven't got around to it. Just give me a little time."

★ ★ ★

"I'll give you all the time you want," she said, "but the weather won't. Pretty soon we'll have to turn off and drain the outside taps, so you won't be able to flush the drain. Then the ice will start forming where the gutter meets the bargeboard, and I shan't stand idly by if you think you're going to get a ladder and be an aerialist up there. And another thing, what are you going to do about that peckerwood who's come back and is working on the underside of the overhang at the peak of the roof?"

"I'll borrow an airgun again", I told her.

"Good," she replied. "The peckerwood will appreciate that. He may not like living dangerously, but he has a well enough developed sense of humor to enjoy the joke when you take a bead on him. Maybe that's why he comes back—just for the fun of the thing."

"Okay," I admitted. "I've been gettin a little lazy the last three or four months. But give me a little time and you'll see the chips fly. Sure, I'll get around to these chores. Just you watch."

She gazed silently out of the picture window and then murmured: "Oh boy! And here it is a full 56 days before most people make their good resolutions." She paused before adding, "I'll wait. I've made a career of waiting. But not much longer."

Datsun 1600 automatic gives you everything you want. Just put your foot down.

There's only one way to handle the Datsun 1600 automatic. Briskly.

When you want to pass on the freeway, just swing out, tramp on the gas and your Datsun will jump to it. You see, the Datsun 1600 is not like most small automatics. Small cars generally don't have the engine capacity to handle an automatic transmission properly. And most of them only have a 2-speed transmission, so you don't get any pick-up at all.

What you do get is a gutless wonder.

Datsun 1600 is different. It's got guts. 96 hp, and one of the best power/weight ratios in its class. A silky three (count 'em, three) speed Borg-Warner transmission. 100 mph performance. Datsun 1600 has poke. And with all that poke you get contoured bucket seats, front discs, all independent suspension, choice of two doors, four doors or a wagon . . . all the extras, all the luxuries and all the performance of the standard Datsun 1600.

Just no gearshift. If you like a gearshift, you can get one for about $200 less than the automatic option. But if you don't, put your foot down and demand a Datsun 1600 automatic.

And then you can really put your foot down.

BEA

British European Airways' sales in Canada and the U.S. during the first five months of the fiscal year to the end of August increased 33 and 35 per cent, respectively, over the corresponding period of a year ago.

In his regular report chairman Sir Anthony Milward said that such "off-line" sales were adding substantially to the airline's contribution to Britain's balance of payments.

Rothmans

Net earnings rose by 62.8 per cent during the quarter ended Sept. 30, reports Rothmans of Pall Mall Canada Ltd.

The net figure given was $1.47 million, or 92 cents a share, compared with $907,000 (57 cents) a year earlier.

Net sales were up 19.7 per cent at $58.9 million against $49.2 million.

During the quarter, cigarette sales in Canada generally declined by 1.1 per cent, while Rothmans increased cigarette sales. Rothmans major diversification, Canadian Breweries Ltd., increased its earnings for the quarter ended July 31 by 23.3 per cent, for $4.5 million net.

Kelly, Douglas

Sales of $140.9 million—an increase of 5.27 per cent—are reported by Kelly, Douglas & Company, Ltd.

The report was for the 36 weeks of operation ended Sept. 6.

President Victor F. MacLean said profit for the period after provision for income taxes was $872,450, or 33 cents per share.

This third-quarter report includes 11 weeks when 30 corporate stores in the Lower Mainland were closed by a strike of meat cutters that ended Aug. 25.

Standard Oil

Nine-month earnings of Standard Oil Co. (Indiana) are reported 6.2 per cent higher than for the period a year ago at a record $257.8 million. The figure in 1968 was $242.8 million, and per share earnings compare at $3.64 and $3.43 respectively.

Total revenue for the nine months was $3.23 billion vs. $2.99 billion, or 8 per cent higher.

Bayland

Bayland Mines Ltd. has started a full-scale fall-winter exploration program on 80 claims in a block recently optioned from a private holder near Grand Forks.

Located 32 miles northwest of the Forks next to the former B.C. Mine, the claims have a copper potential to be surveyed by magnetic, electromagnetic and geochemical means with drilling planned.

Brameda

Brameda Resources Ltd. reports it has made the final advance of $800,000 to Churchill Copper Corp. Ltd. under an agreement to provide development funds to Churchill.

Chairman B. O. Brynelsen said in Vancouver a total of $3.8 million has been supplied this year.

Under the agreement of April 10, Brameda was given the right to make advances on an option basis totalling $2.8 million, the advances being convertible into shares of Churchill at $7 per share.

Gulf

Investment dealers are taking orders for Gulf Oil Canada Ltd.'s 8½ per cent debenture issue to raise an anticipated $50 million.

Price is 99.75 and accrued interest to yield 8.56 per cent to Dec. 1, 1974 and 8.52 per cent to maturity in 1989. Investor interest has been moderate.

An attractive feature of the issue for those interested in short term investment is the option to redeem in 1974, but not before then, while long term investors and institutions will be interested in the further period.

Merger Activity In U.S. Blasted

WASHINGTON (WP) — The unbridled conglomerate merger movement threatens consolidation of corporate assets and decision-making into an exclusive "industrial elite" incompatible with the free enterprise system, Congress was told Tuesday.

Tax advantages and stock market speculation—not a quest for efficiency—have propelled the current merger boom to dizzy heights, a sharply critical government report asserted.

A Federal Trade Commission staff study contended only more stringent public policies, embodied in antitrust enforcement and new legislation, can slow down merger activity and shape the future structure of the U.S. private economy.

FTC sent the controversial study to congress without its official endorsement because of disagreement over the report's conclusions on the five-member commission.

Commissioner Mary Gardiner Jones criticized the staff report's conclusions. She said they rested essentially "on hypothesis and theorization" rather than real, conclusive evidence.

FTC Chairman Paul Rand Dixon called the study "useful background," but noted that neither the commission as a whole nor the individual commissioners "necessarily endorse or adopt the report or its recommendations."

ACTION NEEDED

Willard Mueller, who authored the report while he was FTC's chief economist, summarized the study's conclusions for the Senate antitrust and monopoly subcommittee Tuesday. He warned that government inaction in curbing the merger movement would be both wrong and dangerous. "Simply put . . . we are running out of time," he said. Mueller is now teaching at the University of Wisconsin.

The report cited a pattern of growing centralization of economic power in the hands of the 200 largest manufacturing corporations over the past four decades.

By the end of 1968, the top 200 controlled over 60 per cent of the total U.S. manufacturing assets, the report said. The sharp increase in their assets was attributed mainly to their merger activity.

Acquired manufacturing assets averaged about $5 billion annually during 1965 and 1966, increased to $10 billion in 1967, to 15 billion in 1968, and ballooned to an annual rate exceeding $20 billion during the first quarter of 1969.

"In 1968 the merger movement reached such a magnitude that in a single year nearly 10 per cent of all independent manufacturing corporations (worth) over $10 million were acquired," the study said.

RECOMMENDATIONS

"A more vigorous (antitrust) enforcement policy "might have forestalled much of the rush for acquisitions, the report added.

Following the merger boom in the first quarter of this year, acquisition activity fell back to the 1968 rate due to enforcement efforts (presumably several cases against conglomerate mergers filed by the justice department) and declining stock price, the report said. But it would be "a gross mistake" to interpret this recent downturn as evidence the movement is spent, it warns.

The report made these recommendations:

- Rewrite tax laws which now "subsidize" mergers by allowing tax free treatment of those accomplished through securities transactions.
- Require large, conglomerate firms to disclose profits and losses by products or divisions, rather than lumping their revenues in one consolidated figure.
- Extend the antitrust prohibition against interlocking directors to companies which are "potential competitors" and to those which operate in a buyer and seller relationship. (present law extends the prohibition only to companies which are direct competitors).

New Plane Tax Stirs Protest

MONTREAL (CP)—Don Watson of Vancouver has his work cut out for him as new chairman of the Air Transport Association of Canada.

The problem calling for his immediate attention is a recent government decision to apply immediately a 12-per-cent sales tax on aircraft purchased by Canadian airlines for international flight.

Mr. Watson, vice-president Pacific Western Airlines Ltd., said Tuesday he intends to go to Ottawa to appeal the decision when the three-day ATAC annual conference ends today.

One disturbing feature of the government's action, he said, is the lack of prior consultation.

He told reporters he found out about the levy only Monday when he received a notice for payment of the tax on a plane he had bought from Hawaiian Airlines.

Basically the situation is that the government has decided to rescind an order-in-council providing a one-year deferment of the sales tax for carriers operating both internationally and domestically.

A. C. Morrison, ATAC president, said the order-in-council called for an immediate payment of the tax by wholly domestic operators, but deferred payment for lines like Air Canada and CP Air, both ATAC members with extensive international operations.

PAY DOMESTIC ONLY

At the end of a year, Air Canada was to submit a report outlining the ratio of its domestic and international operations and to pay 12 per cent on its domestic flights only, less depreciation.

Under the new ruling, however, Air Canada would have to pay 12 per cent immediately for both services.

The ruling is going to catch a lot of air carriers short of money, Mr. Watson said. Air Canada, with its multi-million-dollar orders for jumbo jets and air buses, could be facing a tax bill for as much as $10,000,000, payable upon receipt of the planes.

One possible source of relief, Mr. Morrison said, is that a portion of the tax payable on international flight may be rebated.

Earlier, Mr. Watson said in an interview following his election as chairman the big problem facing the Canadian air industry is how to give it more political punch.

He said the industry now is politically insignificant with employees and their families representing a voting force of only about 90,000.

"We have to broaden our own constituency to have a voice in Ottawa," he said, adding that the ATAC intends to make Canadians more aware of the values of air transportation to them.

NEED STRONG LOBBY

He said that by the end of 1971 Canadian air carriers are going to be a $1,000,000,000 business and will need a strong lobby in Ottawa to correct some of the problems existing between the government and carriers.

In a morning committee session, Allen Loke of Air Canada urged support for the proposed Canadian tax on airline passenger fares.

He said the tax would likely be five per cent on domestic and trans-border fares and a passenger service charge on overseas travellers.

"Hopefully, the $20,000,000 take will be earmarked for department of transport use." Most of the money should be used to improve airport facilities.

Opposition to Mr. Loke's suggestion came from the floor.

Some delegates felt that the tax would pose administrative problems for smaller carriers, which should be exempt on the basis of the small amount of revenue involved.

Others said the tax applying to airline fares only would give land and water carriers an unfair advantage.

MPs Bored by PM's Smooth Style

By DAVE McINTOSH

OTTAWA (CP) — Good government can be dull government, Prime Minister Trudeau has said.

Whether the current government is good, as Liberals claim, or bad, as the opposition maintains, Parliament is listless.

For the first vote of the new session, 104 of the 263 MPs were absent from the Commons.

True, the NDP was having its policy convention in Winnipeg. But the NDP has only 22 MPs and some stayed in Ottawa.

A few MPs were representing Canada abroad. That aside, the Commons attendance was still meagre for the start of an allegedly bright new session of Trudeau legislation.

The byword was boredom.

Parliament had bad reviews even from some of the players.

A senior Conservative MP, for example, said there was little to attract his party members to Ottawa.

He said that as far as he can see there is nothing in the 71 pieces of legislation listed so far by the government which could stir up a decent political fight.

Here are titles of some of the bills presented by the government for parliamentary consideration at this session:

Canadian National Railway financing and guarantee bill, established programs (interim arrangements) act amendments bill, Canada-Sweden supplementary income tax agreement bill, coastal fisheries protection act amendments bill, Expo winding-up bill, Migratory Birds Convention Act amendments bill, Yukon Placer Mining Act amendments bill and textile fibres identification bill.

ZOWIE AND POW

A Liberal MP said things are dull because Prime Minister Trudeau has taken firm and full charge of the government and knows where, when and how to pull all the levers.

As a result, he said, fewer mistakes are being made than at any time since the oil-smooth mid-years of the St. Laurent administration.

Mr. Trudeau has said that one of his objects is to foresee crises and try to prevent them before they can occur.

So far, his foresight seems to have been keen because there have been none of the crises which daily seemed to beset the regimes of John Diefenbaker and Lester Pearson. Moreover, there was the added electoral thrill of minority government in Canada from 1962 to 1968. An election could occur at any time—and usually did.

One thing about a smooth operation here—and majority government—is that cabinet ministers can go about their business across Canada and abroad without fear that the government will be overturned in their absence.

The cabinet has the use of five airplanes, including two jets, and a helicopter for government business.

HAS NO CRONIES

Since April, 27 cabinet ministers have travelled more than 350,000 miles on 197 separate flights, none of them, it is emphasized, for personal reasons.

Mr. Trudeau takes such a detached view of government that he does not, like many politicians, have kitchen cronies whom he asks in for coffee and advice.

There is no inner circle of government, though Mr. Trudeau's best friends here remain State Secretary Gerard Pelletier and Regional Expansion Minister Jean Marchand. They were friends many years before any of them came to Ottawa.

The prime minister tends to go through proper channels, as they say, for his advice. This means that on an economic problem he will seek information and advice from economists.

On occasion, this would have been a fairly startling procedure for some Canadian prime ministers.

Informants say that one big reason the government runs smoothly is that Mr. Trudeau does not fall back on cronyism. Rather, he expects officials to be officials and to know their stuff.

JUDGE REGRETS ANIMAL TALK

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Superior Court Judge Gerald S. Chargin apologized Tuesday for the "intemperance" of his remarks against Mexican-Americans in sentencing a 17-year-old youth for incest with a younger sister.

Chargin, a Santa Clara County judge, expressed his apology in a letter declining an invitation from a San Francisco board of supervisors committee to explain himself at a public hearing.

●

Judge Chargin said the incident was under investigation by the judicial qualifications committee and that it would be inappropriate to accept the committee's invitation now.

In his sentencing statement in San Jose, September 2, Chargin said, "The animals in our society ought to be destroyed because they have no right to live among human beings".

He also observed, "Maybe Hitler was right".

$20.7 Billion Bill For Military Hardware

By SPENCER RICH

WASHINGTON (WP) — House-Senate conferees approved a $20.7 billion military procurement authorization bill Tuesday, containing the nation's first legislative curbs on chemical-bacteriological warfare and denying $100 million for a start on a third nuclear aircraft carrier.

Those were the two major items of the bill which gave broad recognition to the fight waged last summer by a bipartisan bloc of Pentagon critics in the Senate.

Cut from the bill in conference were several curbs approved by the Senate or agreed to by Senate armed service committee chairman John Stennis (D—Miss.) during last summer's debate.

In each case, Stennis told reporters Tuesday, the house conferees insisted on deletion and he was forced to yield.

Dropped in conference was a Senate provision giving the general accounting office subpoena powers to obtain defence contractor records in order to file quarterly reports on the extent and causes of cost overruns on military contracts.

The conferees retained a provision for reports on military contractor profits, but the subpoena concept was "totally rejected by the house," Stennis said, adding that armed services committees would issue subpoenas for those records they believed the GAO needed on a case-by-case basis.

Also dropped was an amendment by Sen. John Sherman Cooper (R—Ky.) attempting to bar the use of military funds to finance action by U.S. troops in a Vietnam-type war in Laos or Thailand. Cooper has said he will offer similar amendments to appropriations bills.

The bill includes a three-quarter-billion-dollar authorization for a start on deployment of an anti-ballistic-missile system, an item previously approved by both chambers.

It also includes $28 million to start work on what Stennis called a "simplified fighter" for use by local armies in southeast Asia; funds for 170 army Cobra helicopter gunships, A 7E and A 7D fighters, the Tow anti-tank missile, The Sam D surface-to-air missile, the Main battle tank and the E-2C naval aircraft.

Of $1 billion added by the house on its own initiative for increased naval ships, the conferees allowed $415 million, lopping out $100 million in long lead-time procurement funds for the third nuclear carrier pending a study to be completed by April.

Wilson Visits

LONDON (Reuters) — Prime Minister Wilson hopes to be able to visit Washington next month, but no final arrangements have been made, informed sources said Tuesday. Wilson has wanted to call on President Nixon before Christmas, possibly in the first half of the month.

Asylum Granted

FLORENCE, Italy (Reuters) —Three Czech tourists who arrived here from Prague five days ago were granted political asylum Tuesday. The trio, whose names were not disclosed, were described as a driver and his wife, both 40, and a 30-year-old school teacher.

Break-in Brings 2-Year Sentence

A man who earlier pleaded guilty to breaking into an Oak Bay apartment and attempting to break into three homes was sentenced to two years in penitentiary Tuesday.

Robert Chambers, 30, also known as Massey, of no fixed address, said in provincial court he wanted psychiatric help and Judge William Ostler said it would be available to him.

He was caught Oct. 9 by Oak Bay police who found jewelry in the trunk of his car stolen from a Belmont Avenue apartment earlier that day.

Chambers admitted an attempted break-in in the same day and a break-in and two attempts Oct. 6.

He was sentenced to concurrent terms on four of the charges before Ostler in the morning and a similar concurrent term on the fifth charge before Judge J. A. Byers in the afternoon.

In another case, David King, alias Burns, of 1212 Finlayson, was jailed for a year after writing a $104.95 cheque on a fictional bank account Oct. 11.

Ostler said he was sorry for King because such activity seemed to be a compulsion with him.

"You're only out of jail a short time and you're back at the same old game."

Isaac Campbell, 18, of Ahousat, was committed for trial before a judge and jury by Ostler after the accused asked that a preliminary hearing be waived.

He was charged with criminal negligence after an accident on Craigflower Road Oct. 26 in which two people were killed.

Marketing Board Vote Loses

A plebiscite conducted in the greenhouse cucumber and tomato industry in B.C. failed to show sufficient support to establish an industry-wide market board, Agriculture Minister Cyril Shelford said Tuesday.

Of 72 growers who voted, 40 were in favor and 32 opposed to a grower-controlled marketing board. Shelford said a 66 per cent majority is considered necessary in plebiscites of this type.

The vote was conducted in October.

Children Save Woman From Jail

A Lake Cowichan woman who wrote seven worthless cheques totalling $281.87 at local stores this summer will have to pay the money back.

Mrs. Larue Bongard, 33, had earlier pleaded guilty to the seven false pretences charges and appeared before Judge William Ostler Tuesday for sentence.

The cheques, ranging from $15.16 to $75, were cashed for groceries and cash at local stores between May 13 and Aug. 7.

Even allowing for her difficult financial circumstances, there was no excuse for her action, the judge told Mrs. Bongard.

He said he would have jailed her if it were not for her children.

Mrs. Bongard was placed on probation for two years and ordered to repay the stores at the rate of $25 a month.

Halloween Prank Victim Dies

* * * * * *

Police Examining Every Clue to Find Culprit

By ED GOULD

Myron Walter Parenuik, 25, of Youbou died in Royal Jubilee Hospital Tuesday and RCMP today redoubled their efforts to find the person who felled the tree that led to his death.

Parenuik suffered massive head and body injuries when his car ran into the tree on Halloween night on a foggy stretch of highway 10 miles east of Lake Cowichan.

The car hit the tree at the driver's eye level "making a convertible out of the car and nearly decapitating the driver."

●

Cpl. Scott Coxen, head of Lake Cowichan RCMP detachment, said a thorough scientific investigation is under way to find the person or persons involved.

He said today the wedge of wood and sawdust cut out of the tree are being compared with similar material that shows up in pant cuffs, shoe seams and the floors of cars belonging to suspects.

●

Several "automatic checks on those capable of it" have been carried out without success but others at work in the woods will be interrogated when they return home at the weekend, Coxen said.

He said the methods the detachment is using in checking the tree material, saw marks, foot prints and tire tread marks is similar to those in tracing guns and cars involved in hit-and-run accidents.

"Except in this case we have a hell of a lot less to go on in comparing the known with the unknown."

The same saw was used to cut another tree which was lying across the road farther back towards Lake Cowichan. Removing it and investigating an unrelated accident delayed police in getting to Parenuik.

Tire marks found there were also identical making it possible for police to put together at least a "possible description" of the prankster's car.

"The tires were five-ribbed, summer tread on possibly a late-model smaller car," Coxen said.

The supposition that it was a smaller car was based on the fact the tread was light "but this may have been because of the extreme springiness of the wet soil."

●

Coxen said calls "mostly from cranks but some honest" began to come into headquarters following appeals for information that might relate to the case.

Most callers refuse to leave names.

"But one man even named a Lake Cowichan resident he suspected did the job. We checked him out and are convinced that he was not involved in any way."

The break Coxen is looking for is based on more than one person being involved.

●

"One of the parties, one who may not have actually used the saw himself, may feel pangs of conscience after reading that the victim of the practical joke is now dead. I hope he phones or comes in. It's our best chance."

The fact that the trees were fallen in an expert manner, a wedge cut out of the front and a single cut at the back so that they would fall across the highway as planned, did not necessarily indicate that a professional logger did the cutting.

"Anyone from 11 years old on who lives in a community like this soon learns to use a powersaw," Coxen said.

Construction Pace Intense Everywhere

Construction activity on southern Vancouver Island this year is almost double last year.

Building permits issued by the seven municipalities in the first 10 months of 1969 total $67 millions compared with $45.4 millions in the same period last year.

Leading the way is Victoria city, with permits worth $30 million, an increase of just over $8 million from last year. Apartments are responsible for almost half this figure.

Saanich was second with $19.7 million worth of building permits issued, up from the $13.8 million last year.

But residential construction was down. Permits have been issued for 346 houses and duplexes this year worth $7.4 million compared with 412 worth $8.1 million last year.

Oak Bay, boosted by apartment construction, registered $6.3 million, up from $2.3 million last year.

Other figures (last year's corresponding period in brackets): Sidney $3.1 million ($2.7 million); Central Saanich $2.7 million ($1.9 million); Esquimalt $2.5 million ($1.6 million); and North Saanich $1.7 million ($1 million).

Figures from Langford-Colwood-Metchosin were not available.

HOUSING CONFLICT

Prices Down And Sales Up

By AB KENT

While average Victoria prices have dropped, multiple listing real estate sales in the last quarter have risen, suggesting a conflict within the industry.

But according to local real estate men the explanation is simple. Average house prices have fallen, partly following a national trend caused by tight money and high interest rates on mortgages.

The result is that more houses for sale are placed on multiple listing to improve the chances of selling them in a tighter market; hence the greater multiple listing total for both the three months ending Oct. 31 and in the 12 months going back to November 1968.

Victoria Real Estate Board president P. G. Jackson said a seasonal decline could be expected about this time, which might be another explanation for the drop in unit average price.

He also drew attention to the fact that a greater improvement in average prices was registered by Victoria in the first quarter, compared with other cities in Camada.

"We shot up higher than the others in the spring, so we've come down a bit sharper in the fall," Jackson said.

Average Price of $21,438

Figures published by the Canadian Association of Real Estate Boards show the average price of a Victoria home sold in the third quarter this year was $21,438, a decline of $1,894 from the second quarter, but still $3,815 higher than at the end of last year.

By comparison, Toronto prices were off $1,000 between the last two quarters but the latest average is $2,000 better than at the end of 1968.

"The trend to lower prices seems to be more prevalent in eastern Canada and in the smaller cities," said CAREB research director Blair Jackson. On a national basis, the average decline from second quarter prices is $400, or 2 per cent.

He compared a 26 per cent dollar increase in multiple listing sales for the mid-year report, with 7 per cent growth in the third quarter.

Average growth in recent years has been 25 per cent, and for the first nine months of 1969 the rate is 21 per cent.

In Victoria last month there were 130 multiple listing sales, four more than in the same month last year, with a total value of $3.39 million.

Total value in October 1968 was $2.6 million, bringing the 12 months to $32.87 million, or $6.27 million less than the $39.15 million in the 12 months from November 1968 to the end of last month.

Ask The Times

Q. How many union members are there in Canada? Can you tell me how many of these are international? What are the five largest unions?—P.D.

A. The federal department of labor lists union members at 2,074,000 as of January, 1969, an increase of 64,000 during 1968. There are 101 international unions, 59 national unions, 196 directly chartered locals (152 with CLC; 44 with CNTU) and 124 independent local organizations. The five largest unions are United Steelworkers of America, 150,000 members; Canadian Union of Public Employees, 124,500; International Union, United Automobile, Aerospace and Agricultural Implement Workers of America, 113,000; Public Service Alliance of Canada (CLC), 96,200; United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, 73,500.

HMS Argonaut tilts with wind as she warps in

A FUNNY THING HAPPENED ON WAY TO THE ADMIRAL

By PAT DUFOUR

Whoops!

Even before Sir Francis Drake nonchalantly finished his game of bowls on Plymouth Hoe and set out to give the Spanish Armada the beating of its life, the Royal Navy has prized punctuality almost as much as the daily tot of "Nelson's Blood."

A proud tradition was today thrown to the winds—or thrown by the wind—when the anti-submarine frigate HMS Argonaut entered Esquimalt Harbor for an eight-day visit.

Anyone with a dram of seawater in his veins knows it to be an unpardonable sin to enter harbor before your ETA (estimated time of arrival).

★ ★ ★

No one knows this better than the British.

Wednesday's arrival was scheduled to have the Argonaut steaming by Duntze Head at 0900 with Rear-Admiral H. A. Porter at the ready there to take the ceremonial salute from the visitor.

It didn't happen.

After steaming around at Royal Roads in a delaying manoeuvre, Argonaut set off full bore for the harbor, rounding Duntze Head six minutes ahead of schedule.

The admiral didn't make it.

★ ★ ★

As a naval spokesman explained, "The admiral had just left the administration building when we looked out to see Argonaut gunning it down the harbor."

He also said that the wind, which was blowing about 30 to 40 knots at the time, might have caused the unpardonable sin.

Argonaut's landing, too, was not quite in the Nelson tradition.

Strong gusts swept her as she tried to make a port landing, heeling over the ship of the line; her narrow beam and tall superstructure giving her the flexibility of a sloop.

Finally, with the assist from three tugs, she made it.

Which all proves that when there's a wind there's often a whether.

950 Layoffs Possible At BCFP Mills

Prospect of another 950 sawmill workers being thrown out of work at B.C. Forest Products, Ltd., Vancouver Island plants grew large today unless Ottawa intervenes to end the 5½-weeks-old longshore strike.

Two sawmills in Victoria, employing 550 men, and one at Lake Cowichan with 400 men are operating on a day-to-day basis, B.C. Forest Products said.

A full assessment of the situation was to be made later today by company management in Vancouver.

To date, according to a survey by the Council of Forest Industries, 5,000 sawmill workers on the B.C. coast are unemployed because there is no export lumber being loaded and inventory space is virtually depleted while dockers maintain their strike in the principal ports.

LOG DEFICIENCY

Within a week, the figure will be 10,000, said CFI, correcting an earlier estimate that said 10,000 could be jobless by the end of last week.

An insignificant number of loggers have been laid off woods operations due to the surplus lumber situation. Many of the loggers still working are building up a log inventory deficiency that developed during the summer.

"Depending on what happens in Ottawa, the crunch will come this week," a CFI spokesman said.

Gordon Draeske, CFI president, is in Ottawa on a regular visit to policymakers and will make a point of seeking assurances from government spokesman to keep the forest industry going.

'SECOND LOOK'

The CFI said in Vancouver that "every mill still operating is going to have to take a second look." Those that have shut down, including five of the largest, will not be opening, he said.

MacMillan Bloedel Ltd. was the first major company to close its sawmills, but several smaller ones have been shut for several weeks. Sooke Forest Products was the first to close, reopened when settlement of the strike seemed imminent and is operating now.

Mine-mill operations in the interior also are being squeezed since most rely on export shipments for revenue.

High Winds And Rains Weathered

Victoria has weathered the high winds and heavy rains of Tuesday with minimal damage and inconvenience.

The southeasterly winds of Tuesday that gusted to 50 miles per hour from a 30 mile per hour average are expected to shift to the northwest this afternoon and only gust to 30, a weather office spokesman said.

Spokesmen for B.C. Hydro and Power Authority and B.C. Telephone Co. said little or no problems were experienced in servicing.

A Victoria Parks spokesman said there was "no problem at all" as a result of weather disturbance.

Arthur Mayse . . .

IN THE MAIL THE other morning, the handsomest envelope ever to come my way. Most of its front was given over to a woods scene done in the classic outdoors tradition.

It shows a canoe drawn up on a lake shore, a lone woodsman cooking his supper, and against a rank of birch trees, an explorer-type tent with front open to catch the fireglow.

A tangle of gaunt roots occupies the foreground. Evergreens rise in the background, and the postal stamp contributes a full moon.

★

The thing about this scene is that it was painted in water colors by a quietly busy Victoria artist. His name is Howard N. Davis. With talented wife, Esme, he lives at 4578 Hughes Road.

The note inside dealt with other matters, but before she ended it, Mrs. Davis explained that decorating envelopes is her husband's hobby.

He began it early in the last war, and since then has enriched several thousand envelopes with paintings or pen-and-ink sketches, no two of them alike.

★

In 1965, Howard Davis retired from provincial government service as an artist for the surveys and mapping branch.

Along with much other good work, he left behind him a unique land-form map of B.C. You'll find it on a second floor wall of the new provincial museum. Many hands had a part in preparing the floor-to-ceiling project, but it was Davis who evolved it with the help of 180,000 air photographs.

Back now to those eye-pleasing envelopes. I suggested to Esme Davis, whose own scripts and illuminations are a fair sight to see, that a man so gifted could make his hobby pay. Davis could, and has received flattering offers only to decline them.

His envelopes are not for sale, a circumstance that adds stature to the gift.

GOOD-SPORT VICtorians who decided that Mrs. Lorna Vinden should go with a Canadian Wheelchair Sports Association team to Pan-American games in South America have guaranteed her trip.

★

A Canadian Paraplegic Association fund, into which dimes, quarters and dollars have been tumbling since I aired Mrs. Vinden's plight, has now climbed well over the $1,100-mark.

Lorna Vinden, as happy as she is excited, has booked her passage to Buenos Aires. She will leave Victoria by CPA on Nov. 25. Her racing wheelchair goes with her, and if hard trying can accomplish it, she'll bring another batch of medals home.

★

Significantly, many of the letters she's received have come from other handicapped men and women to whom her accomplishments as wage-earner and athlete have given courage.

To her, good luck.

From her, to Victorians and also to a scad of Vancouverites, much thanks!

ANY NUMBER OF TIMES, I've heard from disappointed young job-seekers who ran into an education block. They hadn't put in enough school time to qualify in a job-mart that gets tougher by the minute.

But one girl in our town has come up against a reverse situation. Wherever she applies for work, she's told that she has too much education.

That unlikely possibility never occurred to her when she graduated from Uvic last spring as a Bachelor of Science. A microbiologist who had majored in botany, she hoped to land a spot with one or other federal department in Victoria, where her husband is working toward his own degree.

But that was before Prime Minister Trudeau launched his government economy program. A berth of the sort she sought failed to materialize.

★

She then began looking for any job that might be going. invariably, when she did succeed in tracking down an opening, she was told that a girl with a BSc. was far too well educated for such work.

Now, with not a thing in sight, she urges local industry, commerce and what-not to forget about her degree and please come up with just a plain, honest job, period.

All of which increases my conviction that it's a funny world . . . though not always funny-ha-ha.

No Birth Control Pills Thank You—Just $2

Two bucks. That will do it.

If everybody kicks in $2, the United Appeal can make it over the line. The line is $694,000 and today the collected total is just over $500,000.

Besides that, Appeal officials want to get poor old Earl Levy down from his windy perch in the clock tower at the Mayfair Shopping Centre.

He has to come down Saturday because the Mayfair people want to put up their Christmas decorations, but "I don't want to come down a loser," he said this morning.

So the Appeal is asking everybody who hasn't yet given to send $2 to the headquarters, 1917 Cook. And they're asking everybody who has given to see if they can't find an extra $2.

While Levy has been weathering his vigil, a former Victorian now living in San Rafael, Calif., has been looking out for him. Today he received a parcel in the mail from Carol Borgens. It contained, among other things, a banana, some dog bones, incense, lifesavers, bandaids and birth control pills. Birth control pills?

Habs Appear Set To Flex Muscles

Bill WALKER

There was a time when he would have risen and snapped at the bait. But not now. A. J. "Buck" Houle seems reasonably satisfied with his new lot in life. That position is executive director of Hockey Canada.

Buck, former manager of the Victoria Maple Leafs, was in town last week to set up a game here with the Russian team, and to renew old acquaintances.

The bait was a story out of the East charging that somebody was dissatisfied with the manner in which the Nationals were conducting their business, that business being the recruitment of players for the Nationals, Canada's representative hockey side.

The allegation was that this particular club had not been contacted in regard to a player, and that this player had been illegally sought out by the Nationals and lured away from his team by a combination of "tampering and poor ethics."

"Not so," said Houle simply. "The contract was made by someone else from our office; the schedule was studied so that the player would not miss any games with his club; transportation was provided to and from his home town; the player had agreed to all the arrangements."

The player in question was Grant Moore, who had played previously with the Nationals. The club was Orillia, where Moore is playing at present.

The crux of the issue, however, is not the two games Moore played this week with the Nationals in Winnipeg against Montreal Voyageurs, but rather the fact that Moore is to join the Nationals for this month's overseas tour.

"And we have permission from his law firm for him to make the trip," Houle stated. "It's tough enough to get players without running into this sort of thing."

Then he explained what he was up against, but in a matter-of-fact approach paralleling that old cliche — what will be, will be.

"I've got the players from the last tour, plus some new ones, plus some bodies. But right now there are more bodies than players. What I need is players."

This is where Moore, an established performer, fits in, and so do Corby Adams of the Barrie Flyers and former Toronto Maple Leaf Brian Conacher, who are expected to be a part of the team.

"We need players of this calibre," Buck intoned.

"Sure, I'd like to have Golden Guyle (Guyle Fielder), and I'm asking permission to speak to him," he revealed. Fielder currently is in Prince George and has retired from his legendary association with the Western Hockey League.

"I would also like permission to talk to Bill White, the malcontent Los Angeles defenceman; to Bill Hay, the former Chicago star, and to many others," he explained.

"But to sign these former pros, you must have permission to talk first, and then abide by the other rules and regulations later."

Houle didn't admit that he had spoken to any of the players in question, but he did smile when he said if he could get them it would certainly enhance the status of the Nationals.

"Is this any different from running a pro team?" he was asked. A sly grin was the response from the man who suffered a heart attack in the final weeks of the last season the Maple Leafs were in existence here.

"Well, I haven't had a cigarette, since I left," he said of the past. "And I'm playing as much golf as I can," he admitted.

But to the question he said: "I'm budgeting this year for $380,000." The first season with the Leafs here the budget was $175,000, "but we didn't make it," he confided. "And every year after that it went higher."

"How will the Nationals fare?" A leading question, but not to Buck.

There were no great promises or predictions. Rather there was the implied hope for some tangible form of success this season with better to come as the program he has in mind for the team develops.

"We need help," he admitted. "Russia, Czechoslovakia and Sweden all have good clubs. And they are well seasoned," he explained, in pointing up the fact that Canada had 11 players under the age of 25 and the other three clubs an average of only six.

"That gives them an experience edge that is hard to match, and hard to overcome in just a couple of years," he said.

Of the new pros that will be coming to the Nationals, "some may make it, and if they do we will be fortunate."

He didn't say the current crop had been pretty well picked over by the time the Nationals got their look, but it was easy to see what he meant.

True, Buck may complain that he was hit over the head and forced to sign up with Hockey Canada. But it is just as true, that he's definitely taken the task to heart, and is laying the groundwork for a more solid organization than he found when he first walked in the door.

"We have two main philosophies," he said of the aims of Hockey Canada.

(A) To support, operate, manage and develop a national team or teams for the purpose of representing Canada in international hockey tournaments and competitions:

(B) To foster and support the playing of hockey in Canada, and in particular the development of the skill and competence of Canadian hockey players, and in this connection to co-operate with other bodies, groups and associations having similar or related purposes and objectives.

Heavy stuff. But to Buck it is the beginning.

He is looking beyond this year to an educational program of hockey scholarships for deserving and interested players. The details are currently being worked out.

"It could be the answer to it all," he said.

DAWSON CREEK (CP)—The Dawson Creek Canucks, of the South Peace Hockey League have announced they will accept grain as payment for season hockey tickets, which sell for $22.

Injured Stars Back in Action; Leafs Top Seals

By The Canadian Press

At least some of the pieces fell back into place for Montreal Canadiens in the last few days and their prospects for another National Hockey League championship appear to be stronger.

The defending Stanley Cup champions started the season with four stars sidelined and two more added to the casualty list in the early going.

Coach Claude Ruel was forced to dip into his well-stocked reserve squad—the American League Voyageurs—for replacements for left wingers Dick Duff and John Ferguson, defenceman J. C. Tremblay and right-winger Yvan Cournoyer.

Also sidelined was left winger Gilles Tremblay whose recurring respiratory ailment has put his hockey career in jeopardy, and captain Jean Beliveau who was suffering from fatigue at the beginning of the season.

But Beliveau is getting back into stride, Duff has given up his retirement plans, Ferguson has all but forgotten his fractured thumb and Cournoyer is recovering from a fractured nose.

The little right winger is expected to appear with a face protector tonight when the Canadiens are on home ice against Minnesota North Stars.

J. C. Tremblay is out with an injured left hand but could be back next week.

TRAIL BY TWO

The Canadiens have dropped all the way to fourth place in the East Division standings, but are only one point behind Detroit Red Wings and two behind Boston Bjuins and New York Rangers who share the lead with 14 points.

And to make things easier, tonight's game is one of four against West Division clubs in the next five for the Canadiens.

Cournoyer's return to the lineup will likely mean Pete Mahovlich or Marc Tardif of the Voyageurs will not dress for the Canadiens. Defenceman Guy Lapointe remains with the club in place of Tremblay.

The club said Duff will resume skating today but there was no indication when he might be ready to play.

Another player trying to get back into shape is veteran centre Orland Kurtenbach of New York Rangers. The NHL club assigned him Tuesday to Buffalo of the AHL for further conditioning after a spinal fusion operation last year.

Rookie Juha Widing has taken Kurtenbach's place in the lineup. Back in action with the Rangers is team captain Bob Nevin who suffered a knee injury early in the season.

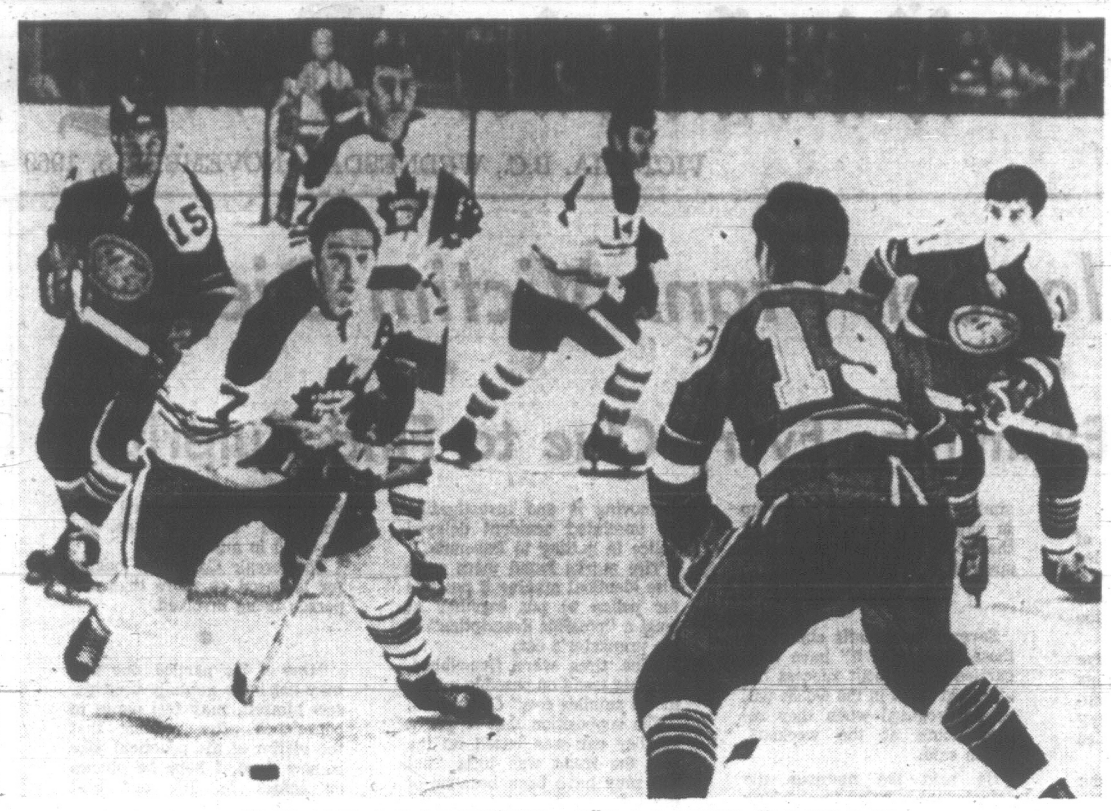
UNDEFEATED AWAY

Toronto will be trying to extend its current undefeated road record tonight against Los Angeles Kings. After a 4-4 tie with Boston Bruins Sunday, the Leafs whipped Oakland Seals 5-2 in the only scheduled game Tuesday night.

The Leafs, now just two points behind the Canadiens, continue their road trip at Montreal Saturday and Chicago Sunday.

Murray Oliver got two Leaf goals in the second period after captain Dave Keon answered a first-period score by the Seals' Doug Roberts.

Left winger Paul Henderson made it 4-1 for the Leafs early in the third period. Ted Hampson scored for the Seals but Jim McKenny, a defenceman playing right wing, got his fourth goal of the season to wrap up the scoring for Toronto.



TIM'S HAVING SEAL TROUBLE

It was one Leaf surrounded by Seals as Toronto's Tim Horton (7) drives down ice during National Hockey League game Tuesday night at Oakland. Closest Seals to Maple Leaf veteran are Mike Laughton (15) and Best Marshall (19). Horton earned one assist as Leafs skated to 5-2 victory over Seals before skimpy crowd of 4,672 fans. Democratic But Prices Also Super

NEW ORLEANS (AP) —The 1970 Super Bowl football game will be democratic in that it will cost you $15 no matter where you sit—end zone or 50-yard line.

The ticket price for the Jan. 11 game in Tulane's 80,000-seat stadium was announced Tuesday by Jim Kensil, executive director of commissioner Pete Rozellt's office.

The game matches the champions of the American and National football leagues. Tickets to the last game, which saw the AFL champion New York Jets upset Baltimore Colts in Miami, were scaled at $12, $8 and $6.

Kensil said the game is expected to gross about $3,700,000.

Each player and coach on the winning team will draw a $15,000 share of the net receipts, Kensil said, with each player and coach on the loser to get $7,500.

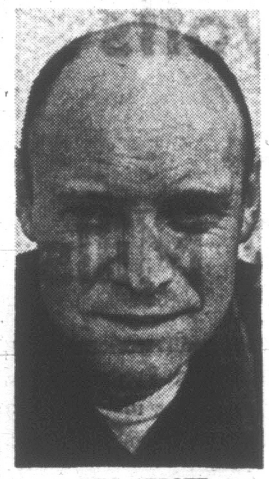
Soccer Officials Angry As Tournament Shifted



BILL ABBOTT
. . . with first team

Victoria and District Soccer League officials were still irked today after learning Tuesday that their four-game invitational tournament, scheduled for Saturday and Sunday, would be shifted because of turf troubles at Royal Athletic Park.

City manager Dennis Young said the decision was made because of the number of games scheduled and the amount of play recently at Athletic Park.

"There are some brown patches," said Young. "And four games in two days is hard on any field."

The city arranged for the tournament to be moved to Macdonald Park.

"We suggested some of the games could be played in Royal Athletic but the league officials seemed to prefer to have it all in one park," said Young.

"They will have a chance to make a bit more money at Macdonald as well because they can run their own concession there."

PILOT PROJECT

Grant Johnstone, district league vice-president and organizer of the tournament, was disgruntled with the city for waiting until four days before the starting date to switch parks.

"This was to be a pilot project for a bigger tournament in conjunction with the province's festival of sports in May," said Johnstone. "We were planning to go to Los Angeles and San Francisco to get teams to make that a class "A" tournament. But we've got to run one to find out if it's feasible."

The four-team tourney will go on with games at 12:30 and 2:30-p.m. each day at Macdonald.

OREGON ENTRY

Entered are two Victoria and District League all-star squads, University of Oregon Ducks and an all-star team from the Mainland League.

University of Victoria Vikings and Victoria West will be represented on the Division I all-star squad from Victoria by four players each.

The Vikings are Russ Ball, Mike Sails, Greg Pearson and Jack Magi while Don Head, Don McIntosh, Mike Beaulac and George Paul will come from Wests.

Gorge Molsons and Oak Bay will each have three players on the team. Bill Abbott, Tom Somner and Curt Clark will represent Gorge while Peter Wheaton, John Rostron and Gerry Horne will be sent from Bays.

Other players are Luigi Lise of Tally-Ho, Jos de Bruin of Hourigans and Rudi Kuebler of Cosmopolitan Royals.

SECOND TEAM

The second team was selected from VDSL second and third division clubs.

From the second division come Brian Lindsay and Andy Csabi of Labatts, Ross Swanton of Hotspurs, Ken Meadows of London Boxing Club, Tony Paceco and John Craveiro of Coffee House, Wayne Nystrom of Village Green, Harvey Alfonse of Cowichan, Alex Stewart of Victoria West, Greg Sam of Saanich, John Pennington of Uvic Norsemen and Doug Bainbridge of Tillicums.

Third-division players are Charlie Dilba of Lake Hill, Pat Rice of Songhees, Mike Deturbville of Casuals and Gordon Sutherland of Oak Bay.

No-Rush Gamble Produces Victory

NEW YORK (CP) — Olympic champion Bill Steinkraus took a gamble and won the international jumping event Tuesday night, putting the United States in a commanding lead as the National Horse Show began an eight-day run.

Steinkraus, the first American to win a gold medal in Olympic equestrian competition when he took the individual title in 1968, rode Bold Minstrel to victory in the Democratic Challenge Trophy event.

The U.S. team also won the West Point Challenge Trophy in the afternoon. The Canadian team failed to get a placing in this event but was third in the night jumping.

Steinkraus said he didn't rush Bold Minstrel, the only horse that had a clean round in the six-horse jumpoff.

"I gambled . . . I didn't rush him too much."

Steinkraus explained that none of the other horses in the field had gone clean and that there were only two mounts behind him.

"So I decided that the best thing to do would be to try for a clean round and not worry about the time. It turned out to be a good guess because the two others after me had faults."

Steinkraus tied the National's high jumping record of seven feet, three inches two years ago on Bold Minstrel.

"He's an old horse," Steinkraus said. "But he never stops trying. And he is in good shape. He took it easy most of the summer."

Second place went to Jared Brinsmade of the U.S. on Triple Crown and Terrance (Torchy) Millar of Winona, Ont., was third aboard Shoeman.

Millar was the only one of three Canadian riders in the event to make the jumpoff. He had four faults in his ride in the jumpoff.

Moffat Dunlap of Newmarket, Ont., on Argyle, and Brian Callahan of Toronto, on Arak, missed the jumpoff when they each had four faults in the earlier round.

Canucks Roar Back To Edge Roadrunners

VANCOUVER (CP)—Vancouver Canucks, down 2-1 going into the final period, pumped in three goals to edge Phoenix Roadrunners 4-2 here Tuesday night in a Western Hockey League game before 6,706 fans.

Paul Andrea, Len Lunde and Duke Harris picked up a goal apiece in the final period to give Vancouver the victory and a share of first place with Portland Buckaroos.

Andy Bathgate scored the other Canuck goal while Anore Hinse and Jim Paterson replied for the third-place Roadrunners.

Bathgate gave Canucks a 1-0 lead at :58 of the first period on a picture goal when he broke in all alone on Phoenix netminder Rick Charron, drew him out and tucked the puck neatly into the corner.

Hinse tied it at 1-1 late in the third period before Paterson gave Phoenix a 2-1 lead at 17:18 of the second period.

Andrea then tied it, backhanding in his own rebound and Lunde banged in the winner with a blast from 35 feet.

Harris scored the insurance marker with one second remaining after Phoenix pulled Charron in favor of a sixth attacker.

Coach Leaving Edmonton Club

EDMONTON (CP) — The Journal says Neil Armstrong, head coach of the Edmonton Eskimos, probably will leave the Western Football Conference club to become athletic director at Oklahoma State University.

The newspaper says Armstrong, coach for six years, left Tuesday for interviews at the university, where he formerly played and was an assistant football coach.

Weird Welterweights

THIS ONE LOST LAUGHING

MONTREAL (CP) — Gene Herrick's sense of humor got the better of him Tuesday night. The Maine welterweight lost his bout against Montreal's Gerald Ratte because he wouldn't stop laughing.

Referee Marcel Racine awarded Ratte a four-round TKO because Herrick was laughing and talking.

"When you laugh in the ring," Racine said later, "you're laughing at the people. I warned Herrick three times. He kept it up so I just ruled it a TKO."

JOEY'S FOE HID IN CORNER

MONTREAL (CP) — Joey Durelle, Canadian welterweight champion, came up against a new tactic in a boxing match Tuesday night and couldn't cope—his opponent hid in a corner.

Durelle was awarded a third-round TKO when Bobby Payzant of Freeport, Me., wouldn't fight.

Payzant, cornered, put his gloves up over his curly sideburns and struck such a posture that Durelle refused to hit.

Referee Guy Jutras ruled Payzant unfit opposition.

WINNER CAME TO DINNER

TORONTO (CP) — Welterweight Clyde Gray of Toronto Tuesday collected his 18th consecutive professional boxing win before 167 "black tie" dinner guests in the Royal York Hotel ballroom.

Gray was awarded a seventh-round technical knockout at 1:03 over Dave Dittmar, of Philadelphia. Gray managed four knockdowns in the scheduled 10-round exhibition bout.

Kamloops Rockets have a chance tonight to step five points ahead of second-place Victoria Cougars and Vancouver Centennials in the British Columbia Junior Hockey League race.

Rockets, who moved three points into the lead Tuesday by edging Essos 4-3 in Vernon, play at home tonight against the sixth-place Kelowna Buckaroos.

Bob Nystrom and Wayne Gibbs put the Rockets on the scoreboard before Vernon's Don Manson made it 2-1 at 10:39 of the second period before 850 fans.

John Senkpiel and Don Olsen did the honors for the Rockets in the third period as they hung on to their lead despite a Vernon threat on goals by Barry Bleakly and John Price.

Mets Retain All Coaches

NEW YORK (AP) — The New York Mets announced the rehiring of the coaching staff of Yogi Berri, Rube Walker, Eddie Yost and Joe Pignatano Tuesday and also revealed that first baseman Donn Clendenon will undergo toe surgery.

John Murphy, general manager of the world champions, disclosed the club had adjusted Clendenon's two-year contract in view of his contribution to the club's success. Clendenon was named the outstanding player in the World Series when he hit three home runs.

Clendenon's contract covered both 1969 and 1970 at a reported $50,000 a year. The Mets are believed to have raised the ante to $55,000.

SEATTLE EXPECTED . . . . . TO KEEP PILOTS

Baseball Dream Fades

DALLAS (AP) — The vision of major league baseball for Dallas Fort Worth has faded, the Dallas Times Herald said Tuesday.

American League president Joe Cronin has confirmed reports that a scheduled meeting for club owners in Cleveland Wednesday has been postponed pending proposed sale of the Seattle Pilots' distressed franchise.

Cronin's office said no new date had been set for the meeting. The league statement said the delay was caused by continuing negotiations between Pilots' major stockholder, William R. Daley of Cleveland, and Seattle businessman Fred Danz, who heads the group trying to rescue the floundering franchise.

All indications point to the Danz group raising enough money to pay off majority stockholders Chinn Lee of Honolulu and the Soriano brothers, Max and Dewey, and a partial settlement for Daley, who owns 62 per cent of the Pilots' stock.

BOBBY WON'T . . . . . . PLAY TONIGHT

Hull, Hawks Huddle

CHICAGO (AP) — Bobby Hull and Chicago Black Hawks were in conference Tuesday night but no decision was expected immediately in the squabble between the high scoring left winger and the National Hockey League club.

Hull announced his retirement before the present season started because of a contract hookup. Although Hull last year signed a four-year contract at an annual $100,000, he has complained the Hawks have not lived up to certain agreements outside the legal pact.

Hull conferred with his counsel, Joseph Crowley, Tuesday morning and later in the day met legal representatives of the Hawks. Final details were expected to be ironed out later in the week, said an unidentified source.

Hull has missed the Hawks' first nine games during which they have won two, lost six and tied one. The Hawks are home against New York Rangers tonight but Hull is not expected to play even if the dispute is settled.

Independents Extend Streak

Independents overcame a 42-38 deficit at half-time to bounce Farmer Construction 83-77 and remain unbeaten in the Victoria Senior Men's Basketball League Tuesday night at Central Junior High School.

In the other game, Hotel Douglas fell behind briefly in the first half but later turned a 30-22 lead at the half into a 61-54 victory over Century Inn.

Ken Jackson sank 16 of his 22 points in the second half while John Lauvaas canned 12 of 23 to lead Independents in a second half surge that stretched their victory streak to four games.

Independents led by 10 points before relaxing a little in the final minutes.

Sapporo Won't Have Late Rush To Complete Olympic Facilities

By BRUCE LEVETT
Canadian Press Sports Editor

With the exception of one small hockey rink, all facilities for the 1972 Winter Olympics in Sapporo, Japan, will be finished and in use a year ahead of the Games.

And that's a total of 14 facilities including jump hills, indoor and outdoor skating rinks, biathlon course, slalom, downhill and cross-country ski courses; bobsled and luge layouts.

Total cost—not including housing projects such as the athletes' village and press accommodation—is $25,500,000, shared equally by federal, provincial and city government.

WON OUT OVER BANFF

Visitors to Sapporo, capital of the northern island of Hokkaido, should not expect to find these facilities in a sweeping alpine setting such as at Banff, Alta., which lost to Sapporo in its bid to play host to the 1972 games.

Nor are the surroundings as snow-swept and rugged as those at Garibaldi, B.C., where Canada hopes to stage the 1976 Games.

Sapporo is built on the so-called Sapporo Fan, the remains of a delta. The mountains that border it on the south and the west are wooded to the top with none of the sweeping snowfields familiar to Canadian skiers.

Mount Eniwa, where the Olympic downhill event is scheduled is less than 4,000 feet high.

Mount Ieine, site of the slalom, giant slalom, bob and luge events, is not quite as lofty as Mount Eniwa.

The weather for the period of the Games—Feb. 3-13—is described in official bulletins this way:

"The weather in Sapporo is influenced by a seasonal wind which is caused by the high atmospheric pressure of the Asian continent. During the month of February the prevailing high extends over Sapporo and for this reason Sapporo is not subjected to abrupt or marked changes in temperature, wind velocity or precipitation.

"The average mean temperature during February is -4.55 degrees centigrade with an average daytime temperature recorded at -2 degrees.

"Similar statistical temperature readings to these can be found in Davos, Helsinki or Toronto. The average maximum termperature is -1 degree centigrade with an average minimum temperature of -11 degrees."

On the centigrade scale, zero is freezing which means that the Games will have an average temperature a little below freezing; a five-degree rise in temperature and things begin to melt.

HOUSING IS TIGHT

Games officials in Japan say they expect Sapporo's 1,000,000 population to double during the Feb. 3-13 period and are anticipating a housing problem.

There are three major hotels in the city and about a dozen second-class hotels.

"We are hoping our people will open their homes to the visitors," one official says.

Sapporo is a city of nicknames, referred to in publicity releases as "Little Tokyo" and "the Tokyo of the North," and, in reference to the fact that it was founded about 100 years ago, "the City of Youth."

CULTURAL CENTRE

It is a manufacturing and cultural centre and its breweries turn out some of the best beer in Japan.

One tourist brochure claims that Sapporo has it both ways, stating "it is in approximately the same latitude as the southern coast of France," then claiming "our winter climate, when the city is transformed into a beautiful snow land, is similar to that of the Scandinavian countries."

Churches Fighting Tax Move

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — American religious forces, already feeling the strain of increasing tax charges, are mounting broad-scale opposition to a case before the U.S. Supreme Court aimed at abolishing all tax exemptions for churches and synagogues.

Both Christian and Jewish leaders maintain the step would curtail many religion-run humanitarian services and cripple the country's founding principle of religious freedom.

"It is one of the most important cases concerning relationships between church and state to come before the Supreme Court in this decade," says Rev. Dean Kelley, head of the religious liberties department of the National Council of Churches.

He says the lawsuit "goes to the heart of the matter" by challenging tax exemptions for places of worship themselves.

It would give the government the power "to encumber, terminate or alienate" a house of worship by exacting money from it, or to "disposess the worshippers, if such exactions are not punctually paid in full or cannot be," says a National Council brief filed in the case.

Religious institutions in recent years have come under spreading demands for real estate and other tax payments on various peripheral properties not directly related to religious activities.

VOICE APPROVAL

In addition, Roman Catholic and most major Protestant and Orthodox bodies, through their joint agencies, have voiced approval of proposals to tax profit-making activities of religious institutions when these are not related to religious functions.

But the legal move to impose taxes on facilities directly connected with religion and its perpetuation has produced widespread opposition.

A number of religious bodies have filed friend-of-the-court briefs in the matter.

The attack on the exemption, rejected by New York state's highest courts, was launched by a New York lawyer, Frederick Waltz, who maintains the tax exemption on church real estate forces involuntary extra payments by non-members, thus infringing on private property without due process of law.

He says he is a Christian, but sees no need for membership in religious organizations.

They Won't Be Penned Up in Reserves They Will Not Give Up Their Land

Times staff writer John Mika took 2½ hours to fly in "a great aluminum thunderbird" from Victoria into the heart of the Nass River valley, the homeland of the Nishga people. But it took him a slow and painful 23 hours to return as weather mocked "our technological myths." To Mika, that was symbolic of the impressions he received between the two contrasting journeys. And his main impression? A new Quebec is emerging from the B.C. wilderness.

By JOHN MIKA

Einstein learned that time and distance are relative things even though he never visited Kincolith.

But he was brilliant.

I had to go there last week to learn it the hard way during a trip that began as a quick and easy journey into the mythical past and ended as a slow and painful progress into the real future of our country.

Much more important, Indian Affairs Minister Jean Chretien learned something there, too.

Just as Quebec's Canadiennes transformed the nation in the past several years by asserting themselves after two centuries of lassitude, and not exactly according to a sympathetic royal commission's masterplan either, the next revolution of Canada's character already is swinging near as the Indians also seek a just place in their own way, and not precisely following the path of a trail blazing "white paper".

In polite but vehement speeches, the leaders of the "Nishga nation", a tribe of about 1,000 tough souls who inhabit the broad Nass River valley which winds northeastward roughly parallel to the curve of the nearby Alaska panhandle, told their trustee the times are changing even faster than he thought.

●

They emphasized over and over that their first priority was to establish ownership of all their hereditary land through the courts and not through Parliament. In fact they warned the federal cabinet not to get between them and the law by setting up a commission or tribunal to mediate their dispute.

Symbolically important, the second priority was given to Chretien's own white paper proposal to turn over title of all designated reserves to Indians and eliminating his portfolio.

They said they agreed with this in principle, but in principle only, and the details would have to be hammered out with them and not with the departmental functionaries who are supposed to represent them in the bureaucratic scheme they wish to disavow.

Chretien demonstrated how hard the lesson hit home by throwing away the politician's speech he came to deliver, after so much careful preparation in the carpeted offices of the nation's faraway capital where it is discreet to softly tiptoe around rough realities.

●

Instead, jolted by the defiantly proud cry he heard in the B.C. wilderness, he uttered an instinctively human and apolitical cheer.

"I wish you success," he said of their endeavor to refute the white bureaucracy's claim to arbitrary title over their valley.

'We're going to be struggling for a long time yet'—Calder

Both Indian and ministerial outbursts came in the strange syntax and arresting accents of minorities speaking the majority tongue as it evolves into a new language of the land.

Together, they gave voice to Canada's essential message: we spurn uniformity in order to grow towards greatness through our diversity. Each is a distinctive Canadian.

In that profoundly emotional instant in Kincolith, space was annihilated and time was reversed.

The Rideau Canal was the Portland Canal, too, and the aboriginal Nishga people followed the Quebecois colonists back to the beginnings of Canadian destiny to write a new history.

For just as powerful as "maitre chez nous" is the Indian rallying cry for title to their land and all that it implies.

Its sound, from over the mountains and inlets, is beginning to penetrate through the cash register percussion of the gross product and, however faint now, it is sure to grow in volume during the next decade until it too changes the rhythm of our national life.

It's still very hard to hear the new tune through the roar of downtown traffic in Canada's cities.

●

But the song is loud and clear up at the intersection of the 55th parallel north and 130th meridian west where only two trucks ever disturb the peace of the Indian village at the confluence of the Nass and the Portland Canal.

Although it boasts only a population of 350 living beyond the blacktop, television transmitters and telephone lines of Prince Rupert 70 miles to the south, Kincolith is not backward or rootless.

Its people chase salmon in modern, instrument-laden "high liner" fishing boats. Its maidens wear stylish miniskirts and the common masculine headgear is the hard hat.

But the fjord-like backdrop of spruce and fir-green mountains with snowy peaks poking above mists swirling over tidal streams is a timeless setting for continuation of ancient traditions in contemporary dress.

Thus the 12th annual Nishga Tribal Council convention was held there this year, instead of in one of the other three Nass Valley communities, to help celebrate the opening of a 120 by 60-foot post-and-beam structure using all the laminated spans, decorative plywood, aluminum sash, fancy toilet rooms and fluorescent lighting so familiar here.

The long house gives way to the community hall, the potlach to a roast beef banquet prepared and served by the womenfolk, the ceremonial chanting to a brass band concert, the orations of hereditary chiefs to political speeches by band councillors, the watchful warriors to volunteer police, the guests' ritual gifts of copper to cheques for the tibal council's annual budget.

The ever-changing forms are only adaptations by a people who are constantly and consciously themselves, doing their own thing in their own time.

"This is where the land question really began and it is here where it will have to be settled," said Atlin MLA Frank Calder, president of the Nishga Tribal Council, in his speech.

●

He was referring to a century-old event: when the first surveyors came through to plot the boundaries of the proposed Nishga reserves they were met by gunfire.

"We not only oppose the confinement which is known as the reserve system today, we opposed it then, right from the start."

For that reason, there should be no surprise that the 12th annual convention had decided to give approval in principle to Chretien's new Indian policy proposal, he said.

"We voted 45 to 1 with four abstentions, in favor of the principle of your policy so you could say we are 95 per cent in support but that doesn't mean we will agree with all the details and we will want to say that they shall be.

"But, Mr. Minister, you keep going. We don't want you to stop despite all the criticism you are receiving coast to coast.

●

"We believe that criticism against it is made by individual leaders without the consent of the Indian organizations but I predict that before this is over, the population of the Nishga nation is going to be perhaps the only one in all Canada that supports your policy."

Calder shifted back to the land question, pointing out that three-quarters of the tribal conuncil's $17,000 budget for 1969 was spent on the suit it launched against the provincial government for title to some 1,000 square miles of the inlets adjoining the Nass River mouth.

That suit ended Oct. 20 in a judgment by Mr. Justice J. G. Gould rejecting their claim but concluding with a rare use of "judicial liberty" to suggest that the government finance any appeal proceedings that might be launched by the Nishga tribal council.

●

"We do not want grants for this," said Calder. "We will do it with our own money."

In fact, he added, the Nishga council would rather not share in a federal $46,000 grant for re-organizing Indian associations across the province because it did not wish to be charged with hyprocisy.

"We fear to accept any money from governments because any moey we get now is being earmarked for fighting the land settlement case and we do not want to be accused of biting the hand that feeds us," he said.

●

"Mr. Minister, we know that we are going to be struggling for a long time yet and we might not win this case in the end because this valley is one of the most valuable pieces of real estate in the world and the people who control it today don't want to relinquish it.

"But we have committed ourselves to go to the highest courts in the land and even outside if we have to — to the United Nations or the International Court at The Hague.

"We are committed to go all the way, though we know we have a fight on our hands and it will take many years, because it's not just for this generation.

●

"The torch was thrown to us by the past generations. We are carrying the torch now and we will throw it to the next generation. There is no stopping this fight."

He said the Oct. 20 judgment would be appealed and the tribal council did not want to see the federal government intervening by referring the dispute to an Indian claims commission or another body.

William McKay, Greenville band councillor, set the tone earlier:

"Today, we are faced with many great problems," he said with slow solemnity.

"We hope this (proposed Indian) policy does not mean assimilation. That is the great fear we have.

"In this year of 1969 we have for the first time asked the courts whether our people own the land.

(Although the Nishga land question is the oldest dispute of its kind in the province and has been the subject of petitions to the Imperial Privy Council in London, a study by a federal-provincial royal commission from 1913 to 1916 and two special joint Senate-Commons committee hearings in 1926 and 1961, Justice Gould was the first judge to try the case.)

●

"We lost the first argument but this is not defeat," said McKay.

"It's like baseball. The first batter has struck out. There are two more to go — and it's only the first inning."

Chretien, who still says he has not yet fully grasped the English language he began learning after entry into federal politics six years ago, exhibited deep emotion in gestures and expression as he struggled for words to match the eloquence of the Indians.

"I am very much impressed by what you have said here today — that you are a proud people, that you have a good case and that you are going to fight," the minister said.

●

"That is a great step. To do that you have to have guts.

"That is the proper way of doing it and it is a sign of something new emerging among the Indians of Canada —to realize and be proud of your identity as Indians."

He thanked the council for its support of his policy but added that a more thoughtful appraisal now is evident in the wake of initial country-wide condemnation by Indian spokesman of his proposed policy.

"Your children will have to compete with my children if they want to take their place in Canada," he said.

"If they want to live in the old way, they can do that because it is a free country. But they will have to choose one way or the other."

He said choosing the principle behind his policy would help preserve Indian culture.

"This is not the melting-pot," Chretien cried. "The word assimilation does not exist in the Canadian vocabulary.

"What we want is to share our life and responsibilities as Canadians and to be proud of our differences too.

"That is the virture of Canada — to be different and at the same time to be united.

●

"I too come from a minority and my English is not so good. Two hundred years ago there were only 30,000 to 50,000 French in this country and now we are seven million.

"I am proud of my people in Quebec but I am proud to be a Canadian too, like you.

"A culture is not learned in the head but is felt in the belly.

"Today there are 250,000 Indians in Canada who get more and more education every day and yet are controlled by legislation which says you have to have my permission in 115 sections out of 130 in the (Indian Affairs) Act.

"That is wrong.

"I find here a spir that pleases me. This building pleases me. It is a symbol of what the Indian can do for himself. It is a magnificent hall."

Chretien said he would not comment directly on the land case other than to say he had heard and understood Calder's plea that the federal government not interfere by referring it to a commission.

"I congratulate you on the way you have decided to go and I respect it," he said.

The most poignant moment of Chretien's visit had arrived.

Unlike the militant, middle-aged councillors who harangued the audience with spirit, a greying James Gosnell, hereditary chief of Aiyansh village and vice-president of the Nishga tribal council, spoke softly.

His shoulders seemed bowed under the disappointments accumulated over many years and rather than carrying any torch he appeared to have passed his on — yet there was still a searing ember in his eyes as he presented a desk pen set to Chretien on behalf of the assembly.

"For many years our people have been neglected," Gosnell said gently to the audience.

"But we feel that it has reached its lowest ebb and now, the tide has turned for our people. We hope so.

"This is a very historic banquet in the story of our people — that the Honorable Sir decided to honor us by being present in this convention with us."

Turning to the now-standing minister, Gosnell continued in halting English:

"This pen will be a silent witness to the history you will write.

"It will be a silent witness of tomorrow for our people.

"Our children, that are yet unborn, will read of whatever it will write."

●

Chretien gripped Gosnell's hand and pumped it hard. He faced the audience for a moment as though about to reply, then sat down silently staring into his plate.

There were other speeches, many of them, in the Indian style of spinning out the fleeting hours of communal pleasures. The next day Chretien cut the ribbon opening the community hall but couldn't stay for the lunch of turkey and ham cooked by dozens of Kincolith women.

He departed in a Coast Guard helicopter at the last possible moment to make connections for members of his party boarding aircraft at Prince Rupert, rushing out of the helicopter twice to pat heads in the excited circle of children beyond the whirring blades and to give a final handshake to his personal host, Tony Robinson, chief councillor of Kincolith.

●

Schmaltzy? Undoubtedly. The entire convention and Chretien's visit were staged productions but the message of Kincolith is worth dramatization simply because it was unsophisticated.

'To do that you have to have guts'—Chretien

'Now the tide has turned for our people'—Gosnell

My journey from Victoria to Kincolith took 2¾ hours elapsed flight time in three aircraft, and from the superiority of 23,000 feet I composed the glib comparisons of a great aluminium thunderbird flashing like an arrow into the legendary past of a primitive people.

But the ageless weather mocked our technological myths on the return trip and it took a wearying 23 hours to get home. It's pretty hard to feel superior bouncing in the back of a diesel bus from one foggy airport to another or staring with frustration at terminal walls.

The irreconcilable physics of my trips to Kincolith and back seem to symbolize Einstein's theory of the relativity of time and distance.

●

And, even if only for micro-seconds, the several fusions of feeling when the federal politician from Quebec collided with the provincial politician from the Nass River at a banquet table in the midst of the wilderness triggered some awesome eruptions of Canadianism.

You could almost say that the Canadian corollory of that most potent formula reads: Emotion equals MC squared.

"I FIND HERE a spirit that pleases me," said Indian Affairs Minister Jean Chretien, right, as he officially opens the Nishga's new community hall at Kincolith. Atlin MLA Frank Calder, president of the Nishga Tribal Council, assisted him. (CP Wirephoto.)

They're Calling The Joggers, The Crawlers

By ELIZABETH FORBES

When the youth of Canada become really involved in a worthwhile project to help others, especially when they stand to gain nothing themselves, there are more dedicated volunteers, a complete co-operative effort and (understandably then) one hundred per cent success.

That is what Lynne Brassington and her "Miles for Millions" committee at University of Victoria believe and that is why they are going all out to reach the youth of Victoria, from public school through to university age, in their efforts to put the city's second "March" (Saturday, Nov. 15) over the top.

Forbes

Of course they also want the next age group too, and the next and the next.

They are looking for the joggers, the crawlers, the hop-skip-and-jumpers and every man, woman and child who has the will and the determination to get out and make a try to "go the route" of 25 miles.

In doing so, of course, each man, woman and child should have a price tag and enough sponsors backing that tag to make the walk a worthwhile effort.

University of Victoria, in conjunction with Douglas Rotary Club, is sponsoring the 1969 Miles For Millions march.

Two years ago the first MFM "Project 100" raised $108,000 with approximately 12,000 Greater Victoira citizens taking part and a record-breaking 65 per cent completing a 26 mile route. This achievement won for the city the honor of having raised the largest amount per capita of any city in Canada.

★ ★ ★

I'm told the target this year is $130,000 and Lynne and her co-workers are looking (hopefully) for 15,000 walkers.

This time, in the over-all arrangements, there's one big point that should spur local entrants on to even greater effort.

Committee members Bruce McKean and John Olson have announce that half the money raised will remain in Victoria and the remainder will go to national Miles for Millions headquarters involved in fighting world illiteracy, disease and hunger.

Local agencies to benefit are the clinic for handicapped children, Family and Children's Service day care centres, the Elford Street school and workshop and a detached worker program sponsored by the Boys' Club and the YM-YWCA.

The walk commences from the corner of Cook Street and Dallas Road at 8.30 in the morning after former lieutenant-governor George Pearkes fires the offical starting gun.

Uvic students Robert McDougall and Bill Schmuck have planned a scenic route that winds its way through all four municipalities and finishes at the Legislative Buildings.

Twelve check points are being set up in park-like areas "with plenty of room to relax."

Band-aids and foot powders will be in good supply at first aid stations, staffed by St. John Ambulance, at each checkpoint. Energy centres giving out "soft drinks, steaming soup and plenty of hot coffee" will be located at strategic points along the way.

★ ★ ★

Bands aboard flat-deck trucks will continually circle the route to give "music to march by."

"And for those who can't take another step, there will be transportation from anywhere along the way, back to the Legislative Buildings."

Under direction of Uvic's Greg Fraser sub-committees have been set up in every junior and senior high school, all private schools, and nursing schools, the Institute of Adult Studies and at Uvic to deal with the enormous task of distributing sponsor sheets and registering marchers.

A central "elementary school committee" working out of university headquarters will supply younger students with necessary materials.

The general public—the joggers, crawlers and hop-skip-and-jumpers—may obtain sponsor sheets at Eatons, Woodwards, Hillside Plaza, Wooleo or University of Victoria.

When sponsor forms are complete they may then register for the actual march either at Uvic student union building until 9 p.m., Nov. 14 or from 7.30 a.m. on the day of the march at Mile O in Beacon Hill Park.

The stage is well set. The rest is up to you . . . and you . . . and you!

As committee member Jim Armstrong puts it "all that is needed now is the 'cast of thousands', to make this year's Miles for Millions march a smash success."

The curtain goes up at 8.30 a.m. Saturday, Nov. 15.

Don't miss it!

House of Plastic Shown at Exhibition

TORONTO (CP) — About 15,000 people recently saw a show at the Canadian National Exhibition grounds called Plastics '69, featuring a plastic house.

It was sponsored by the federal department of trade and development, the government of Ontario and the plastics industry of Canada.

They decided not to produce a house of the future but to show what can be done today, so the house was more a showcase for building products and furnishings than a model home.

For the exterior, polystyrene-foam blocks were used as formwork for poured-concrete walls. Instead of removing the forms when the walls were dry, the foam blocks remained as permanent insulation. The foam surface can be covered in a variety of materials, interior and exterior.

Plastics House 69 showed a synthetic stucco finish and some horizontal siding of polyvinyl chloride. The front door of the house, looking like any other front door, was actually filled with polyurethane, an insulating material.

In the conventional modern interior, there was a wide range of plastics products.

WINDOWS TINTED

All the windows were made of tinted acrylic, as well as a series of skylights.

In one bathroom walls, bath, floor, and ceiling were made of glass - fibre - reinforced plastic. The bathroom comes in three prefabricated sections that are assembled in the house.

The interior walls of the house were largely covered in vinyl-surfaced gypsum board and sheet vinyls. The living room contained handsome shelf and storage units made of a particle board core faced with a white polyvinyl. The same technique was used to construct a simple and effective bed frame.

The floors of the house were finished in a variety of plastics. One wood floor was polymerized to provide a surface that doesn't need waxing and resists wear. Other floors were covered in synthetic rugs, ranging from nylon to polyester-orlon to indoor-outdoor rugs of polypropylene.

Although the house demonstrated the variety of the plastics industry, it left a number of questions unanswered. Can an all-plastics house be competitive in price with a conventional house? Can it be mass-produced to help cut housing costs?

Skids Greased for Gorton After Vote 'Squeaker'

By VINCENT MATTHEWS
Canadian Press Correspondent

CANBERRA (CP) — Prime Minister John Grey Gorton is struggling for his political life after a federal election that brought his Australian government to the brink of defeat.

Political observers agree that it is doubtful if his government can survive its three-year term. They believe it is only a matter of time before a Labor government achieves power for the first time in more than 20 years.

When Gorton took over as prime minister in January, 1968, his government had a majority of 38 seats in a House of Representatives of 124 members. In the new House of 125 seats, his majority has been cut to six, with counting not yet completed in some ridings.

Gorton is getting the blame for the government's disastrous losses. Australia has never been so prosperous, there is full employment and the economy is booming. There appeared no real issue that could damage the government.

But Labor Leader Gough Whitlam, 53, has emerged as Australia's political strong man. He waged a vigorous election campaign.

Observers agreed he outclassed the prime minister in appeal and enthusiasm. And he expects to be Australia's next prime minister.

Whitlam's confidence is well justified. Within the Liberal party, which governs in a coalition with the Country party, there is widespread dissatisfaction with Gorton.

He has been criticized for a lacklustre election campaign and the decline in support for the government at the polls is attributed to his own lack of popularity.

Treasurer William McMahon, 61, and Dafid Fairbairn, 52, minister for national development, both have said they will try to wrest the party leadership from Gorton.

CRITICIZE BEHAVIOR

Gorton's personal standing began to take a dive after criticisms were made of his social behavior last March. The question was raised in Parliament about his taking a 19-year-old girl from a party to the U.S. embassy in Canberra at 1 a.m.

Then followed attacks by a Liberal member of Parliament, Edward St. John, who alleged Gorton lacked the intellectual and emotional capacity for the job of prime minister.

Gorton said on the eve of the poll that there had been a smear campaign mounted against him. One part of the campaign was posters showing an unflattering picture of the prime minister with the caption: "Would you trust this man to drive your daughter home?"

The posters were distributed anonymously.

SOME THINGS VERBOTTEN IN STATE OF DENMARK

COPENHAGEN (AP) — Helmeted police early today raided the offices of a leftist periodical after it published the locations of secret military monitoring centres allegedly set up in Denmark as part of global, U.S.-directed NATO network of some 2,000 "listening posts."

No arrests were made and no copies of the periodical, called Vietnam Solidarity, were confiscated since the offices were deserted, with no copies of the 4,000-circulation periodical in sight, police said.

A military spokesman said part of the information published was correct, but other sources unofficially said practically all facts given would be easily and legally accessible to "anyone knowing where to look for them."

The police action followed four days after police arrested seven persons on charges of planning to use stolen army explosives for sabotage against military installations or industrial plants producing military equipment for export, mainly to the U.S.

Last week Defence Minister Erik Ninn-Hansen told Parliament he would order the removal of a military communications centre discovered by students in a Copenhagen University basement.

24 ARVN, 80 North Viets Killed in 10-Hour Fight

SAIGON (AP) — The South Vietnamese suffered their heaviest losses in four months Tuesday in a 10-hour battle in the southwest corner of the central highlands. But the government troops reported three times as many North Vietnamese killed with the help of American planes and artillery.

Reports from the field said 24 South Vietnamese soldiers and 80 North Vietnamese were killed in the fighting six to eight miles southwest of the Duc Lap Special Forces camp. Another 38 South Vietnamese were wounded, and several were reported missing.

A government ranger battalion of about 400 men made the first contact with a strong force in the frontier area about 115 miles northeast of Saigon. Two infantry battalions and an armored battalion were rushed up until about 1,500 government troops were fighting in the rolling hills overgrown with long grass.

Elsewhere, half a dozen Viet Cong sappers slipped into Quang Ngai, a provincial capital 80 miles southeast of Dah Nang, before dawn Tuesday and threw grenades into a Roman Catholic church, a secondary school and seven houses. A government spokesman said he had no reports of any casualties, although one house was destroyed, and most of the other buildings were badly damaged. The sappers escaped.

U.S. and South Vietnamese communiques reported only scattered fights overnight and 22 rocket and mortar attacks with nine of them causing casualties or damage.

Before dawn today, U.S. infantry trapped North Vietnamese troops apparently trying to move into an attack position near the district capital of Trang Bang, 28 miles northwest of Saigon. The infantry and helicopter gunships killed 26 guerrillas, and there were no American casualties, headquarters said.

Small Businesses in France Talk Rebellion

By RODNEY ANGOVE

PARIS (AP) — "We're fed up," small businessmen are saying all across France.

The butchers, bakers and candlestick makers who form the backbone of the stable, conservative - and independent - minded middle class, are moving toward what might be a new French petit revolution.

Taxes are the cause, along with increased government social welfare charges. And there is the competition from supermarkets.

Small businessmen and independent tradesmen see their class as the main tax horse for defending the franc, giving aid to African countries, paying for the atomic strike force, and issuing relief payments to imported North African factory workers.

A great number have become mild outlaws by refusing to pay the latest increase. Many have marched in the streets. Some have pitched cobblestones at the police. And a few have dynamited tax offices.

"They're angry, and anger is a very dangerous counsellor," said Bernard Fauliot, leader of the militant National Union of Independent Workers.

PREDICTS HARD FIGHT

Bearded Fauliot is a lawyer in a working-class section of Paris. He says 6,500,000 persons—or 13 per cent of the total French population—support his movement: shopkeepers, independent artisans, professionals, and their employees and families. These are people in business for themselves, risking their own money.

"Revolution is perhaps too strong a word," said Fauliot. "But it's time to strike a hard blow. If the government doesn't find a solution, it will be a hard fight. I won't say long. But hard."

A few blocks away, Claude Boutonnet, 30, perches on the stool he uses to reach the high shelves in his paint and tool shop.

"Personally, I'm not a revolutionary," he said. "I'm a very calm boy. But the way things are now, I'm ready to take to the streets."

Boutonnet, a house painter by trade, worked "day and night and Sundays" to save up $4,950 to open his shop four years ago. New taxes and charges have cut his business by half and his profit to zero. He's fed up.

On Rue des Moines behind Montmartre, Denise le Bêlier, a policeman's wife, serves up a succulent rabbit in cream sauce in her cosy restaurant.

"I really don't know how it will all end," she says. "When I get through paying the taxes and social charges each quarter, I hardly have enough to get my hair done. I'm sincere."

In a richer part of town, Roger Dentz, a 50-year-old household goods merchant, says: "I'm not on the brink of bankruptcy. But I'm being squeezed between price controls and these increased costs. We've got to defend ourselves as a class."

The trouble started in 1966 when the self-employed were assessed for health insurance. Then came extension of the value-added tax—TVA—to retail trade and later a rash of other increases more or less related to the franc devaluation.

NO END TO TAXING

TVA is the way of passing on taxes to customers at every step of manufacturing or processing. For example, when iron ore goes from a mine owned by one entity into a truck owned by another, something has been added to the value of the ore and the buyer pays a tax on it. As the ore becomes iron, then nails and sold wholesale and retail and finally becomes part of a house, its value increases at every change of hands and is taxed.

Last year's massive protest demonstrations in southeast France resulted in the franc equivalent of about $270,000,000 being trimmed from the burden. But it was not enough to restore calm.

In October, at the end of another demonstration, again in the southeast, a mayor and two policemen were "kidnapped" and left without pants in a dark forest. The leader, cafe owner Gerard Nicoud, 23, disappeared in the face of an arrest warrant.

Many complain that the cut-rate supermarkets enjoy preferential tax treatment. But "if this is so, I've never heard about it" said Bernard Decharme, administrative director of the big Prisunic drygoods and grocery chain.

'King Lacked Wisdom, Experience'

ATHENS (Reuters) — Greek school children are being taught that self-exiled King Constantine was inexperienced, lacked wisdom and courage and led his nation to the brink of disaster.

An official history—Greek History of Modern Times by Constantine Svolopoulos — has just been issued to primary schools throughout the country.

It claims that Greece was saved by the handful of army officers who, under present Prime Minister George Papadopoulos, seized power in the grey dawn darkness on a spring morning in 1967.

Papadopoulos, at the time an artillery colonel, emerged as the strong man of the coup, and assumed the premiership after the king made an abortive attempt to overthrow the army-backed government in December, 1967.

The Hapsburg monarch fled to Rome with members of his family after failing to rally Greek troops in northern Greece to his banner, and has lived in exile ever since.

The final chapter of the new 160-page history issued by the government through a state-controlled organization for school textbooks, recalls that Constantine ascended the throne following the death of King Paul in March, 1964.

"From that time, political strife, waste of public money and partisan policies and compromises reached their climax," the textbook says.

"The young and inexperienced king lacked the wisdom and the courage to impose his own will. The country was heading towards a precipice."

The history book contains a bitter attack against communism and the Soviet Union where "the citizen not only is not free and cannot enjoy the fruits of civilized humanity but is also deprived of the right to express his thoughts."

It adds: "It was toward this world that Greeks were being dragged as a lamb to the slaughterhouse."

School children also are being told that the army revolution is cutting off the decaying elements of society and that a new democracy is being born slowly, with prudence and wisdom.

Education experts here say reference to such recent events in textbooks, even for high schools, is unprecedented in the annals of Greek education policy.

Same Problems . . . 50 Years Later

By KEVIN DOYLE

OTTAWA (CP) — Fifty years ago this month a shaky voice crackled from Montreal on electro-magnetic waves to hail the birth of commercial radio in Canada and signal the start of a continuing communications revolution.

The recorded voice, long since forgotten, was broadcast by the Canadian Marconi Co. on station XWA which by 1920 had received federal government approval to broadcast as CFCF Montreal.

Reception that year to the few with the rare privilege of a radio receiver was sporadic. Programming was at best irregular.

But at least some of the recorded music that filled most of the broadcasting time contained a few of the year's favorites: I'll Be With You in Apple Blossom Time; Alice Blue Gown; and I'm Always Chasing Rainbows.

The first commercial radio broadcasting licence—to operate a profit-making enterprise—was issued to a newspaper. The Winnipeg Free Press in 1922 paid $1 to the old department of marine and fisheries for a licence to operate station CJCG.

Two other licences issued that year went to department stores —CJCD Toronto, owned by the T. Eaton Co. Ltd., and for CJBC in Montreal owned by Dupuis Freres.

But radio was not a lucrative business in its early years. Advertisers were scarce and by 1926 both CJCD and CJBC had folded.

PROBLEM EMERGED

The problem peculiar to Canadian broadcasting emerged in the first few years of broadcasting and remains today: Large U.S. stations near the border could smother Canadian signals and dominate the market.

Some faltering stations in Montreal and Toronto, unable to withstand the competition and sensing a possible profit, formed connections with U.S. networks and used their programming almost exclusively.

It was this kind of arrangement that enabled Canadians in 1926 to gather around a few existing receivers and hear how Gene Tunney outpointed Jack Dempsey in Philadelphia for the world heavyweight boxing championship.

By that time, however, network broadcasting had appeared in Canada too, operated in its embryonic stages by Canadian National Railways.

A radio department was added to the debt-ridden CNR in the early 1920s and on Christmas Day, 1923, the publicly-owned company linked stations in Montreal and Ottawa, giving Canada its first network broadcast.

By 1929, the railway had extended its network from coast to coast and was struggling to originate a degree of independent Canadian programming.

A leading dramatist was hired to write a series of Canadian plays for the network. An ambitious young director named Tyrone Guthrie, to become a theatre great, was brought from England to oversee the operation.

CRASH ENDS VENTURE

But the 1929 Wall Street collapsed and the business depression of the 1930s spelled the end of the railway's new venture.

Its direct successor was the Canadian Radio Broadcasting Commission set up in 1932 largely as a result of a report by a royal commission headed by a world-renowned Canadian banker, Sir John Aird.

The report recommended a highly-autonomous broadcasting organization to acquire and operate all private stations. The network was to be financed by licence fees from listeners and government grants.

At the time there were about 600,000 receiving sets in Canada with approximately 40 per cent of the population within range of existing Canadian stations.

When the three-man commission was replaced in November, 1936, by the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. it had 54 affiliate stations across Canada and held ownership of seven. Broadcasting was in both English and French.

Many broadcasters who have been in the industry through much of its history say radio came into its own during the Second World War.

VOICES WELL KNOWN

Families recognized the value of radio news as they turned on their receivers each night for word of a faraway war where their sons or daughters were fighting.

Such "doomsday voices" as that of Lorne Greene, now star of the television series Bonanza, became as familiar and personable to many as that of a next-door neighbor.

One of the greatest spurs to the development of radio broadcasting was the advent of television in Canada in September, 1952, when the CBC's first two stations in Toronto and Montreal went on the air.

Broadcasters say radio has not been permanently hurt by television. It has been forced to concentrate to a greater extent on audience analysis and the provision of public affairs and in-depth news stories, say those involved in the industry.

"But you can't watch television and drive your car," said an official of the Canadian Association of Broadcasters. "And the transistor revolution in radio means you can take it anywhere."

Broadcasters' major concern going into the 1970s is still the increasing influx of U.S. programming and broadcasting regulations which are under constant development.

Regulatory authority passed from the CBC to the Board of Broadcast Governors in 1958 and 10 years later was assumed by the more powerful Canadian Radio-Television Commission.

Transport Minister Don Jamieson, a former broadcaster, said in a recent address:

"Broadcasting has gone through all types of crises in its development. There is still too much interference—too many regulations. But the great problems are ahead. It's the same revolution at 10 times the speed of the 1960s that we have to prepare for."

Far-North Factory Goes Mechanical

BAKER LAKE, N.W.T. (CP) — It's only a four-room house, but crammed inside its walls is an industry, unique in the North, which is making life easier for the Eskimos of Baker Lake.

The house, known as the Duffle Garment Centre, and its products mean a steady income to about 135 Eskimo women who work either there or in their homes.

The garment centre turns out many products, but its biggest seller, so popular that the workers can't manufacture enough to meet demand, is the Eskimo parka.

The centre is the first in the North to employ sewing machines and a mechanical cutter and has a full-time manager, Maurice Thibodeau, hired by the federal government to instruct the Eskimos in modern assembly-line techniques.

"When I installed the sewing machines," Mr. Thibodeau says, "I wasn't sure how the Eskimos would like using them.

"But everything is working out beautifully. They're so used to sewing—it's something they've done all their lives—that they needed very little instruction."

The parkas, in two layers, one of duffle fabric and an outer layer of windbreaker cloth, take only about an hour to make, but the embroidery on each parka, hand-sewn by the women, takes at least a day to complete.

"No parka is the same as any other one," Mr. Thibodeau says.

"Two weeks ago we had 1,000 parkas here and the embroidery on each one was different."

The centre employs about 24 women on a full-time basis, working as sewers, cutters or embroiderers. Cutters and sewers make about $50 a week while embroiderers make about $85 weekly.

In addition, about 100 women work on a part-time basis from their own homes, sewing and embroidering vests, mitts, slippers, hats and ear muffs for the centre to sell.

The centre sold about $8,000 worth of parkas to tourists visiting Baker Lake during the last four months. During that time, another $22,000 worth of the garments were shipped south, with most going to the federal government-owned Canadian Arctic Producers, which retails the garments or sells them to other stores across the country.

In a storage room next door to the centre hang more parkas, about $50,000 worth, each waiting for a shipment of fur, Arctic fox, wolf, wolverine or blue fox, before being shipped to the south.

But even these furs won't be enough to meet the demands.

"It just seems we can't make them fast enough," says Mr. Thibodeau.

"The more we make, the more we sell. I just wish we could find some way to make them faster."

A WISE WORKMAN KNOWS HIS TOOLS

"Are you sure you know what you're doing?" four-year-old Leslie Vilness asks her neighbor Rod Lavalee as she watches him abandon the traditional spatula in favor of the quicker grease-gun. Mr. Lavalee is preparing his entry for the men-only cake decorating contest that will be one of the features of St. Joseph's Parish bazaar. The bazaar, which will take place this Saturday from 2 to 8 p.m., at 745 West Burnside, will also feature stalls of every description, snack bars and a children's corner in the school. Shy Bride of 89 Relents

RICHLAND, Wash. (AP) — The bride was a lass of 89 from Tennessee who said she wouldn't be kissed in public.

When Jimmie Rourke, 100, leaned over and puckered up following their wedding ceremony here, however, the former Lillian Harville relented.

The two were wed recently in the lounge of the Heather House Nursing Home.

When Rourke decided to make Mrs. Harville his bride, he figured it was only right to get her son's consent.

"You're both over 21," said the son, Dr. L. B. Harville, "and I couldn't stop it."

"You know," Rourke said later, "I guess he was right on both counts."

The newlyweds gave some heady ideas to other over-21-year-olds in the nursing home, mused Mrs. Don Daniel, manager of Heather House.

"This may start a trend around here," she said. "Others are now looking around and talking about getting married."

The ceremony was delayed 15 minutes because the minister suddenly realized he'd forgotten his "marrying book."

The anxious groom did a little jig in the corridor while they waited.

"How does she look," he asked friends who kept coming into his room. He hadn't seen her for a couple of hours. "I bet she is as pretty as a 16-year-old."

Books

THE MAN WITH THE TINY HEAD, by Ivor Drummond, is a sick-sexy chase after a pinheaded villain, laughed at by little girls, which may or may not account for his unpleasantness. The author has devised a cast of characters who proceed upon their illogical ways with such fierce determination one is almost happy when the villain smites them down. The author's own claims to fame—as a jockey in Trinidad, a private detective in New York, a film director in Rome, a gigolo in Sydney, and scion of a castle-owning family, may give the reader an inkling. Useful as gift to uncongenial mother-in-law. (Macmillan Company of Canada, $4.50.)

Bazaar Planned For Saturday

Mrs. E. Longdon, president, is convening the annual bazaar of the North American Benefit Association to be held Saturday at 2 p.m. in the Orange Hall, 1620 Fernwood Road. There will be stalls of home cooking, fancy work and aprons, novelties and candy as well as a penny auction and many contests. Tea will be served.

Jaycee Men on the Move Eye Male Fashions

By JUDI FREEMAN

Men who once swore they wouldn't be caught dead at a fashion show are alive and well and living in Victoria today.

Last night more than 200 of them took a look at chocolate shirts and "pouffs to blend" and survived, grinning.

The other 200 in the audience at McPherson Theatre were wives and sweethearts studying the latest in furnishings for "Men on the Move."

It was Victoria's first men's fashion show, presented by the Junior Chamber of Commerce under chairman Dennis Thompson. Styles were supplied by the Downtown Merchants' Association.

The Victoria "man on the move" can look forward to double-breasted suits with padded, square shoulders, deep-side vents and a slightly suppressed waistline. The color is blue and the pattern is stripe — pin, chalk or hairline.

For the casual dates, perhaps a jumpsuit of orange nylon with double blue racing stripes will match the Lotus Europa which provided the backdrop for the show.

Or maybe a flowing caftan will please the hookah crowd.

How did the audience take it?

They laughed and laughed when a graceful young fellow in see-through shirt and San Francisco pants came swinging across the stage, his neck bell ringing sweetly with his sway.

There were exclamations of half-embarrassed glee at the wilder creations — and oddly enough, feminine embarrassment seemed to predominate.

But lest those strong, silent men be credited with being secretly more daring in their fashion outlook than the ladies, one bit of "inside" intelligence must be reported.

A reliable male agent checked the men's powder room to find out what was really being said — and detected some doubt that these were "the kind of clothes you wear every day."

But there were also grounds to suspect that the evening may have been a case of preaching to the half-converted.

The men in the audience were dressed a bit more sharply than the average Douglas-Yates noon hour crowd.

The 17 male models, mostly recruited from the ranks of the local retail clothing industry, presented remarkable contrasts in shape, gait and demeanor.

But for every stiff-legged entrance there was an exit of breathtaking fluidity.

Commentator Jim McGiverin who lent quiet dignity to the occasion only once had to call out in haste to keep an over-anxious model from bolting prematurely off the stage.

Leggy girls slithered across the stage from time to time.

Entertainment was by the Third Time Around rock group and singer Sylvia Hosie.

Coast Safari Held Over

Coast Safari, a wildlife film by David and Lyn Hancock, will be held over in Victoria because of the large numbers turned away Saturday. It will be shown again at 8:30 p.m. Friday in the McPherson Theatre.

As Dave Hancock is committed to previously scheduled bookings in other cities, the film will be narrated by Lyn Hancock and Hilary Stewart, who accompanied Hancock on his trip to the Queen Charlotte Islands.

Florentine Fashions For Schizophrenics

FLORENCE (AP) — Italian fashion designers have dreamed up a schizophrenic for next spring.

By night she is a vamp, dressed like a sulky siren from a Fellini film. By day she's demure and trim in short little suits or neat pants outfits.

The new woman came out this week at the start of the spring-summer fashion show for ready-to-wear, boutique and knitwear fashions.

Flat, smooth wools are a favorite choice so far. Colors are clean and cool with liberal helpings of white in all collections.

The length is still jauntily short, apart from the occasional maxicoat. Pants, always slightly flared, continued to play an important part.

The tunics and coats that accompany them are always long enough to cover the derriere.

Suit jackets are either ultra short or extra long. Skirts always have movement in the form of pleats or flares.

One of the fastest-paced collections was shown by Italian-American Ognibene-Zendman. It featured cardigan costumes in navy, jade green and white.

Accessories included shiny white patent berets, white "nurses'" stockings and long strands of white china beads.

The turban wound from printed silk scarves, is almost the only headgear in sight at the show. It makes the models look like refugees from the Casbah.

This Moroccan feeling carries over into evening when flowing robes, bare midriffs and gold body jewelry take over from the youthful innocence of the daytime look.

Tita Rossi showed echoes of Carole Lombard with slinky silk jersey gowns sashed in sexily tight. Carmen Miranda was recalled too with tall-heeled, platform-soled sandals in all colors.

Apparently from an orgy scene, Tita borrowed lowslung, slim lavender pants and a bra top of gold metal triangles held on with gold chain. It looked all the more sexy for being the uncomfortable thing you'd like to get out of as soon as possible.

Barbaric gold jewelry comes back with a bang. Many earrings were a good four inches across, many more hung down to brush the shoulder.

Fashion designer Emilio Pucci is stressing an ultra-feminine look in a reaction to modern science.

The Italian nobleman, a deputy in parliament, thinks today's woman wants her clothes "feminine and flowing in contrast to the cold impersonality of science."

He showed them that way at his family palace in a collection of soft silks, velvets, neatly pleated little ruffle edgings, demure high ruffled necks alternating with deep plunges and bare midriffs, V-striped trousers, the soft-top strapless and an overall look that is slim and slinky.

Machine Patterns Scarce

I've received quite a number of letters recently inquiring about patterns for knitting machines. After looking for them for some time, I must confess I agree with most of you who have written: They simply do not seem to be around.

If anyone knows a source, please let me know, so I can pass the information along.

I was talking about this with a friend of mine who has a machine that she brought over with her from England. She tells me that it is very simple to adapt hand-knitting instructions to a machine. The most important point is to match the tension with the instructions you are following.

Those of you who have machines will know how to adjust the tension. From then on, it is just a matter of measuring for length.

You do have to take into account that there is less elasticity in machine knitting than in hand knitting. But after a while you will learn to allow for this.

I saw a very original idea for trimming a dress the other day. Black wool had been crocheted into a chain length, then sewn onto the collar and pockets in a wiggly pattern that looped and curled. On a pale greeny-gold dress it was very effective.

Another idea I saw, again using black wool, was making large crochet loop flowers and sewing them to the skirt of a white dress. The flowers had been arranged in three alternating rows from the bottom.

This one-piece hooded suit is just the thing to keep a baby warm during the winter months. Instructions for this outfit cover 9 to 12- month sizes.

Another reader has asked about a child's sweater which has kittens knitted in angora on the front of the sweater.

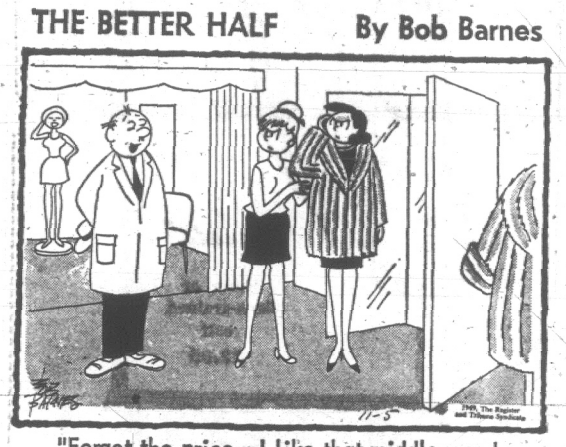
Yes, I do have this pattern, it's No. 6715, a raglan cardigan for 9-12 months. It can be obtained by sending 35c to the address at the bottom of this item.

This one-piece suit in the picture has an attached hood, mitts and shoes. It calls for a double knitting weight of baby wool, and the instructions are for the 9-12-month size.

To order Leaflet No. 6915, send 35c in coin or money order (no stamps or personal cheques, please). Your order must be accompanied with a stamped, self-addressed return envelope, a long one if possible. Send to May E. Mac Lean, Knit and Chat, care of the Times. Allow three weeks for delivery. Please be sure to state pattern number when ordering.

THE BETTER HALF

By Bob Barnes



"Forget the price—I like that middle-aged look it gives you."

SEW SIMPLE

By EUNICE FARMER

Dear Mrs. Farmer,

I have two yards of fake fur and have never used this kind of material before. I have heard that you must use a razor blade for cutting, special thread and needles, etc. I would appreciate any help you can give me. Since fake fur is so important in the fashion picture, perhaps there are many others who have wanted these answers, too.—Mrs. M. H.

Dear Mrs. M. H.:

I shall try to answer some of the questions that come up concerning fake furs. If the pile of the fake fur is heavy and long, it would be an advantage to use a razor blade for cutting and be sure to cut from the backing side. Shake out all the excess loose fibres before you begin sewing.

You won't need a special machine needle, just average size, but be sure not to use a machine stitch that is so small it would draw up your seams. Forget that you are working with fur cloth, get up your courage and pretend you are working with any other kind of fabric.

Usually you will not make bound buttonholes unless the fur is rather flat, instead try to use metal closings, frogs, small belt buckles, or whatever. If the fake fur is very heavy, you may care to bring your lining clear to the edge of the garment and avoid a separate facing. For jumpers, jackets and vests use a lining fabric for facings.

After your seams have been stitched, you may wish to catch stitch them open to keep the seams flat. From the right side, be sure to use a needle and pull out the fibres that have been caught in the seams so that the seams will not appear obvious. Usually, there is no nap either on furs or on leather skins and can be cut in any direction. If there is a noticeable nap where all the fur is running in one direction, you would have to be sure to cut your garment in this way.

This is the season of bazaars and, of course, many new ideas. I know you will want to send for my booklet "Boutique Gift Items" that can be used for Christmas as well as any time of the year. Please send a self-addressed, stamped envelope and 25 cents to Eunice Farmer in care of your paper with your request.

I would also appreciate any new gift ideas from you. Send your gift suggestion to Eunice Farmer in care of this newspaper.

Keeping the Peace

DEAR ABBY . . .

DEAR ABBY: My problem is between my husband (I'll call him Eugene) and my father. Eugene is 25 and my father is 65.

Several months ago they had an argument during which a lot of angry words were spoken. It ended when my father told Eugene never to set foot in his house again! (I'm sure my father didn't really mean it because he keeps asking me how Eugene is.)

I keep telling Eugene that my father didn't mean what he said, and my husband says, "Well, if he didn't, let him call me and say so."

My father is a very stubborn man, and I can't see him calling my husband and telling him he didn't mean it. Eugene is also very stubborn, and he won't make the first move either.

What do you suggest be done? My mother and I are very much upset over this, and we can't seem to get the two of them together.—Upset In Utah

DEAR UPSET: Keep working on Eugene. Tell him that out of respect to your father's age, the younger man should give in.

And ask your mother to keep working on your father, telling him that since he told his son-in-law never to set foot in his house again, it's up to him to tell him that he is welcome, if indeed he is. And let the bigger man extend his hand first. (I'm betting on your husband. Youth is usually quicker to forgive.) P. S. My husband is betting on the old man. He says your mother will have more influence on her husband than you have on yours.

DEAR ABBY: Please don't think I am stupid, but do you know of anyone who can contact the dead?

I recently lost my beloved husband and I sometimes feel his presence near me so strongly that I know I could communicate with him if I knew how.

I have heard that there are mediums who can put the living in touch with the dead. Do you know any such person? I am willing to pay to have this done. I'm signing my name for you, alone. Please don't publish it. Thank you.—From Kentucky

DEAR FROM: Many have claimed that they can communicate with the dead, but so far no one has been able to prove it. Me? I'm from Missouri.

DEAR ABBY: What is all this nonsense about gentlemen preferring blondes?

I consider myself a gentleman, and I have never dated—or had the desire to date—anything but a brunette.

I have spent 58 months out of the last six years in brunette-land. That is, Vietnam, Korea, Central and South America, and I can't wait to get back to Korea.

I wouldn't walk across the street to meet the most beautiful blonde or redhead in the world. The only women who are all women are brunettes.—A Gentleman Who Prefers Brunettes

DEAR GENTLEMAN: You have made the day for many brunettes. (Including this one.)

LIFTS FACES OUT OF LINES, WRINKLES, SAG

Even skin that sags and is no longer smooth, could be made firm and much younger looking. That "older look" usually appears first around the throat, but is comparatively easy to treat by very simple means that require no skill at all.

Get 2nd Debut with CEF 600 or CEF 1200 in double strength from your drug or dept. store and apply it gently to your throat and face each night before retiring. After just a few days, you will notice your skin becoming firmer again and smoother. That is because the 2nd Debut has revitalized your skin with a new supply of water from the surface clear into the inner skin.

Chili-Cooking King Challenged

TERLINGUA, Tex. (AP) — Amid roars of protest from the Texas defender, C. V. Wood, Los Angeles developer, won the world chili cooking title recently.

"Robbery, robbery," roared portly Wick Fowler of Austin, claimant to the world's title the past two years, as he beat the runner-up trophy, an artfully painted chamber pot, against the side of a building in this Mexico-U.S. border ghost town.

Four of six judges declared Wood's chili, containing big hunks of the fiery green chili-pepper, to be the best.

The judges chose Woodruff de Silva, Los Angeles challenger, as runner-up. He adds champagne to his recipe for the hot, spicy meat stew.

Also-rans were Joe de Frates of Springfield, Ill., chili canner, and Clarence Cooper, physics instructor at the University of Texas-El Paso.

This third annual Grand Prix of Chilidom attracted close to 1,000 spectators to the dusty, deserted streets of what was formerly the mercury mining capital of the world.

WRAP IT UP . . .

. . . WITH JEWELRY

Jewelry has joined the ultra-feminine fashion shift from the hard look of chains to the soft wrap-arounds. Twirling around an upper arm, the bracelet on the model at top doubles as a choker or a tiara. Its pearl fringes match the cascading earrings and dog collar. The second model pairs off with wrap-around bracelets of jewelled lions' paws and rings like sea anemones holding jade, coral or lapis stones. The earrings, of lapis and pearls, reflect the blue and white trend which goes with anything and everything.

Tail Tells Tale of Lobster's End

By JEAN SHARP

TORONTO (CP) — When you take a live lobster home for dinner, don't put it in the bathtub. It won't be able to breathe.

That is part of the advice given by Jeri Johnson to people who don't quite know what to do with a lobster.

Miss Johnson, a consumer consultant with the federal department of fisheries, says buying live lobster "may not be the most economical way."

"Officially we tell people that lobsters should be frisky when you buy them, but there are things that affect lobsters so they may not be frisky."

The longer a lobster is in storage water, the more it calms down.

"You can't keep them in the bathtub. They need a salt water solution, and you should use them right away. Don't try to keep them several days.

"When you buy them, you will probably be told they're guaranteed to stay alive for 12 hours. Don't buy them further ahead than that."

BIG ONES TOUGHER

Miss Johnson says a lobster that weighs a pound or slightly more is about right for one serving. She says larger ones may look good, but can be tough.

"They have to be cooked in salt water, as all shellfish should be. Use about a quarter of a cup of salt to each quart of water. Cook them about 15 to 20 minutes in rapidly boiling water. And the pot should be big enough to take the lobster easily.

"When they are finished, put them in cold water to stop the cooking, or they will get rubbery.

"To serve them you slit the underside of the tail with a pair of scissors and cut up to the base of the head. There is very little meat in the body, but it has to be cleared out.

"There is a little brown sac at the base of the head that has to come out. The liver, which is greenish, and the coral roe are in the body cavity. People do eat them as a gourmet treat, but not everyone would want to.

"You can fill the body cavity with a bread dressing or mashed potatoes. Then you heat it at 450 degrees for 10 minutes."

To get the meat out of lobster claws, you crack them with a nutcracker or a sharp knife.

"The claw and the tail are really the only parts that have any meat in them. Maritimers take the legs off and suck them. There is a sort of sweet juice in them.

"Everyone says lobsters are very rich, but they are low in calories. In most restaurants they are done up richly in sauces. You can serve them with melted butter or with butter and lemon juice as Maritimers often do."

You can buy lobsters cooked and frozen and Miss Johnson says you just let them thaw at room temperature.

If you buy one cooked but not frozen, straighten its tail. If it springs back into place, the lobster was cooked while it was alive, Miss Johnson says you should be sure of that because if it was dead before it was cooked, you can't be certain what it died of.

If you do cook lobster or shrimp at home, Miss Johnson says, you can cut the steamy smell of the process by adding a little vinegar to the water. She says it does not affect the taste.

'Mother Heroines' Decorated in Russia

By GAY PAULEY

MOSCOW (UPI) — Always the thought is of and for the children. The Soviet Union is child-oriented to a degree difficult to understand in North America where the pill is a fact of modern life.

It shows in the fact that the U.S.S.R. honors as Mother Heroine, with decoration, any woman who has reared 10 or more children.

It shows in the fact that mothers who have brought up seven, eight or nine children receive the Glory of Motherhood decoration, and mothers who have reared five or six children receive the Medal of Motherhood.

Mothers with two children, giving birth to a third, are given a lump sum grant from the state and those with three children receive a monthly allowance besides the lump sum grant for every successive child.

Nowhere in this sprawling group of republics does one even hear about a world population explosion, about the pill, about any method of birth control.

Russia, with its vast territory (8.6 million square miles) needs far more people than its current population of 239 million (a U.S. state department estimate).

Its propagandists never fail to remind that 20 million Soviets died in the Second World War "for the right to live, work, dream and venture . . . the prime obligation of youth will be the struggle for peace among all the peoples of the world."

"Sow a seed — and reap a habit. Sow a habit — and reap a character. Sow a character — and reap a destiny."

This proverb is quoted to show how the teachers are "faithful assistants" to parents in bringing up the children of the U.S.S.R.

For the teacher, more often than not, is a part of a child's life from the time the infant is six or seven months old. (The Soviet Union soon will have 10 years of compulsory education).

Penny Is Soured By Lemon Incident

By PENNY SAVER

Six wedges of lemon sat on the saucer in the centre of the table.

Number one daughter picked one up and squeezed. A seed went slithering into her brother's mashed potatoes.

Father took another and squeezed. As one trickle landed obediently on his fish, another spurted into the brocolli. "I always like lemon on brocolli," he said.

Mother goofed. When I squeezed my lemon slice the whole thing went flying across the room.

"Maybe you should squeeze the lemons before we come to the table, Mom," commented on of the boys kindly as he dexterously squeezed his lemon without any accidents.

Since I firmly believe that squeezing a fresh lemon is part of the fun of eating fish, I decided on another route. An on-the-spot lemon squeezer.

This squeezer costs $1.49 and can be used for limes as well. From the package I gather the manufacturers see it as a bar accessory.

It works like a pair of scissors with the fruit fitting in a perforated cup that lets the juice through but keeps the seeds behind. It is made of metal.

"I like birds," said Gladys. "But since I have a cat, putting food out for them would be a dirty trick. Why, I would be wilfully luring them into the jaws of death."

"Why not hang the food so high the cat could never reach it? After all, you only want to feed the little birds that can perch as they nibble," Mathilda suggested.

"But if I hung it that high I couldn't reach it, besides I'm not a very good bird feed mixer."

"Then use one of those ready made feeders you can buy for 88 cents. They come in plastic tubs and you leave the tub lid on the food to keep rain, snow and big birds away.

"The whole thing is made so it can easily be hung on a high place—maybe the clothesline. You can reach that. And refills can be bought for 55 cents. I think they're made locally, too."

Slicing butter into nice little pats for parties is a breeze when one uses a butter slicer.

This 79 cent gadget is about two inches wide and uses wires to section the butter. A big brick may have to be sliced a bit to fit through the gadget, but it's the fine work that gets tricky.

New to Job, CYC Answer

By GERARD McNEIL

OTTAWA (CP) — A Commons inquiry into allegations of subversion in the Company of Young Canadians learned little in its opening session Tuesday.

The first witnesses, members of the CYC new permanent council, said they didn't know much about specific cases because they were either too new on the job or had been away for too long.

They said however that a policy directive Oct. 19, two weeks after they took office, bans partisan political involvement and has cut by five the 70 or so CYC members, volunteers and trainees in Quebec province.

One volunteer had resigned, two had been refused six month extensions, and two trainees would not be admitted as volunteers because of political activity.

Meanwhile, the CYC's St. Henri project in Montreal was under scrutiny because of complaints that it was "a source of sin and trouble."

The council members said the Oct. 19 directive came in response to allegations by Lucien Saulnier, chairman of the Montreal executive council, of subversive elements in the CYC.

ACT ON COMPLAINTS

"We will deal in good faith with any complaints," said Council Chairman Jack Johnson, a slight and clean-cut former college professor from Calgary.

He and Jean Roy, the vice-chairman, told MPs that Mr. Saulnier hasn't replied to a letter asking what specifically he was complaining about. They were unable to say much as a result.

William McWhinney, on the other hand, said that as acting director for nine months in 1966, he was in before the CYC began running into the publicized problems.

Both he and Mr. Johnson, replying to Walter Dinsdale (PC—Brandon-Souris), said they didn't feel it would be wise to seek provincial or municipal approval for CYC projects. "It would seriously hamper a project," Mr. McWhinney said.

Mr. Dinsdale's reaction was that the CYC was "bound to continue in hot water" if it continued this way.

SEES RED HERRINGS

When Philip Givens (L—York West) asked why MPs couldn't ask questions and stop making "perorations," Mr. Dinsdale said:

"This committee is a whitewash. Whenever we get close to a point, somebody drags out a red herring."

The witness today will be Alan Clarke, Mr. McWhiney's successor.

Acting Chairman Pierre de Bane (L—Matane) said all provincial premiers have been invited to appear or send representatives but only Quebec, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island have replied. Quebec hadn't made up its mind and N.S. and P.E.I. weren't interested.

TWO LONDON, Ont., food stores were the target Tuesday for an Ontario Federation of Labor protest against the selling of California grapes. The federation is holding its annual meeting in London. The delegates marched through the stores carrying placards. (CP Wirephoto)

Witnesses Blast Poverty Probers

HALIFAX (CP) — Skepticism about the effectiveness of the Senate committee on poverty was apparent during the second day of hearings here Tuesday.

About 150 persons interrupted a session early in the day with speeches, appearing to agree with a video-taped discussion advocating immediate action rather than more study of poverty problems.

The taped presentation was part of a submission from Halifax Neighboring Centre and Halifax Tenant's Protective Association.

The group had asked senators to meet with them again later in the day, but the committee declined.

Buddy Daye, a social worker at the centre, said the committee had asked him to arrange a tour of the city, but failed to show up for it.

"If this is any indication of their sincerity, then I have to be skeptical," Mr. Daye said.

Spokesman for the group stressed the need for immediate action.

Said Leslie Cumming, director of the Neighborhood Centre: "If you are unwilling to move now, this commiteee might as well dissolve itself."

Two other briefs called for a guaranteed annual wage.

David Critchley of the Maritime School for Social Work said that, as long as the "dole philosophy" exists, poverty will also exist.

He also agreed with a brief from the extension department of St. Francis Xavier University that the poor, with the greatest need for a good education, usually get the worst teachers and facilities.

Losing faith and confidence in Joey Smallwood, Newfoundland's Finance Minister H. R. V. Early tendered his resignation Tuesday.

He told a St. John's press conference that he also has lost faith in some of the other cabinet members.

Smallwood at the weekend was re-elected leader of the provincial Liberal party in a bitter three-way fight.

KARATE EXPERT BIDS FOR ZOO LEOPARD

NEW YORK (AP) — Could a llama born in Central Park Zoo find happiness on a Massachussetts farm with a pig and six ducks? Would a leopard find any affinity with a black belt karate expert?

Those are the sort of questions weighed by Gabriel A. Wechsler, assistant administrator of the Municipal Service Administration, in considering bids to buy the city's surplus zoo animals.

Twenty-two animals from the Central Park and Prospect Park zoos were up for sale, including a wallaby, a jaguar, bears, a monkey, a yak, a llama and a leopard.

A farm couple from Massachusetts bid $25 for the llama and promised in their letter that the barnyard animals would be "congenial." The karate expert offered the high bid of $450 for the leopard.

Mass of New Benefits to Emerge In U.S. Contracts in the 1970s

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — One of the steadiest trends in the United States employment picture, as steady as the upward trend of wages, is the growth of fringe benefits. Some day, if the trend continues, the term "fringe" will be an anachronism.

In the period from 1929 to 1967, the increase in payments for benefits averaged 9.6 per cent a year. Wages and salaries, however, increased at a rate of 3.9 per cent.

●

American companies now spend more than $100,000,000,000 a year on pensions, sick leave, vacations and so on, an amount equal to about 12.5 per cent of the gross national product—the total of all goods and services produced.

Yet, says a study by the non-profit Institute for the Future, the United States never has been a leader in implementing social benefit programs.

In fact, in all cases studied by IFF, the United States never has been among the first eight countries to adopt any such reform. It was, for example, the last of 24 countries studied to provide insurance for sickness and maternity.

The IFF study concluded that a mass of new benefits should get at least a tryout in the 1970s in many of the world's industrialized nations, and that some may become the rule rather than the exception within 10 years of their introducion.

Among those benefits likely to make an appearance in the 1970s:

Minimum annual income guaranteed by government, guaranteed employment, maternity benefits for unwed mothers, pension plan extensions to provide for recreational, educational, medical, residential and legal costs.

Also: cost of living adjustments for disability insurance, subsidized housing for employees, "in-house" advance degree programs, widely available educational leave with pay, several shorter weeks during the year.

●

The IFF found that innovative trends are at work, mainly through pressure or stimulus from labor, and that one of the strongest is the growing belief among workers that benefits are rights rather than gifts or rewards.

A great expansion is expected in dental coverage, in the elimination of employee expense for major medical benefits, and in the availability of annual physicals and other health benefits.

Longer vacations also are on the list of benefits expected to expand greatly, and workers are expected to win increased flexibility in scheduling time off.

Pension income is expected to rise and also to be adjusted for increases in the cost of living. And pension plans are expected to be rewritten so that they can be carried from one job to another.

Although many of the changes may be expected to result from labor's prodding and legislation by government, the IFF study found, management probably will take the lead in increasing personal services for employees.

Included in this category are counselling on personal investments, loans, taxes and family problems; sponsorship of scholarships; leisure-time services; packaged vacations; sabbatical leaves.

Apollo Crew Ready To Blast Off Nov. 14

By HOWARD BENEDICT

CAPE KENNEDY, Fla. (AP) — Man has landed on the moon and carried his questing for the unknown to another celestial body. But one trip has only whetted his appetite for knowledge, and he will go back again and again.

Apollo 11 opened the boundless frontier of space and afforded man an opportunity to look deeply into the origins of the moon, the earth and the universe.

Now another giant Saturn V rocket stands on a Cape Kennedy launch pad, pointing at the heavens and man's second voyage to the moon.

Apollo 12 is to soar away from earth Friday, Nov. 14, propelling astronauts Charles (Pete) Conrad, 39, Richard F. Gordon Jr., 40, and Alan L. Bean, 37, toward the moon's Ocean of Storms.

"Apollo 11 proved that man can land on the moon. Apollo 12 will start the detailed geological exploration of the lunar surface" explained Conrad, who will command the all-Navy crew.

Conrad and Gordon, who flew together on Gemini 11 in 1966, are commanders. Bean, making his first space trip, is a lieutenant-commander.

They have selected seafaring names for their two spaceships: Yankee Clipper for the command vessel and Intrepid for the lunar lander.

"We think the names are fitting as we sail on this new ocean of space," Gordon commented.

The 10-day mission will be filled with high adventure from the moment of the ear-shattering blastoff, set for 11:22 a.m. EST Nov. 14.

STAY 32 HOURS

Conrad and Bean are to ride Intrepid to a landing in the Ocean of Storms at 1:53 a.m. Nov. 19 and plan to stay on the surface 32 hours, 10 hours longer than Apollo 11 astronauts Neil A. Armstrong and Edwin E. Aldrin Jr. did in July.

Using new procedures, they hope to overcome the four-mile landing error of Apollo 11 and park Itrepid just 1,118 feet from an unmanned Surveyor III craft which landed on the moon 2½ years ago.

Conrad and Bean plan two walks on the moon totalling more than seven hours. Armstrong and Aldrin spent about two hours outside.

They'll set up a complicated set of scientific instruments powered by a nuclear generator which must be handled carefully because it has a radioactive element. Then they'll carefully document and collect moon rocks, another treasure for scientists.

The two spacemen also hope to make a tricky descent 150 feet down a sloping crater wall to inspect the Surveyor and clip off parts for study. After rejoining Gordon in the orbiting Yankee Clipper, they plan to crash Intrepid on the moon from a height of 65 miles to create a massive seismic shock.

WORK GETS HARDER

Apollo 12 is the second of 10 moon-landing Apollo flights planned by the United States in a three-year period. Each will be progressively harder to achieve as astronauts move from the relatively smooth plains to the highlands and then into craters and deep rilles.

On the final four flights, the pilots will carry along wheeled vehicles that they can drive several miles over the bleak, cratered landscape.

On this flight Bean and Conrad will make two outside excursions, on foot, each lasting 3½ hours, with a 12-hour rest in between. They hope to roam up to half a mile from Intrepid, compared with about 100 feet for Apollo 11 astronauts. Much of the activity will be beamed to earth by color television.

"The first EVA (extra-vehicular activity) will be concerned with setting up five scientific experiments—a seismometer to record moonquakes and other disturbances, and devices to measure the solar wind, the moon's atmosphere and its magnetic field," Bean said. "The second EVA will be primarily to gather carefully documented rock samples."

Algoma Steel Strike Ends On 69th Day

SAULT STE. MARIE, Ont. (CP) — Algoma steel workers, their strike settled by a narrow voting margin, were expected to be back at work by late this afternoon.

The members of Local 2251, United Steelworkers of America, voted 2,587 to 2,319 Tuesday night to end their walkout against Algoma Steel Corp. which began Aug. 28.

A total of 4,936 workers cast ballots out of a membership of more than 6,700. There were 30 spoiled ballots.

A meeting is scheduled with management at 9 a.m. to work out details of a memorandum of agreement. Company officials announced prior to the vote they were ready to recall employees as soon as the agreement was signed.

Algoma officials now will concentrate on a strike by about 200 members of the United Transportation Union, out since Oct. 16. The only outstanding issue is wages.

Company officials have said they intend to operate the plant without the UTU members if necessary.

SETTLED EARLIER

Two groups who earlier settled their grievances and awaited settlement of the strike here before returning to work were 600 at the company's Wawa operations, north of the Sault, and about 800 office and allied plant workers.

The wage package, said to be identical with that received by employees of the Steel Company of Canada Ltd. in Hamilton, Ont. when they settled their strike recently, will give the Sault workers an increase of 75 cents an hour over three years, retroactive to Aug. 1, 1969.

FASCINATED BY POLITICS, NEW MINISTER CLIMBING FAST

By JOHN BEST

OTTAWA (CP) — Robert (Bob) Stanbury has become the most junior member of the 30-man federal cabinet, with a special responsibility for Canadian citizenship.

It's another step up the ladder for a man who professes to be fascinated by politics, without an irrevocable commitment—and who also has established a record since his election in 1965 of doing the right political thing at the right time.

"As my constituents re-elect me, I'll probably stick with it," says the handsome, sideburned MP for Metropolitan Toronto's big York-Scarborough constituency.

His re-election last year with the biggest majority of any Ontario Liberal candidate points to an extended political career.

Robert Douglas George Stanbury, who became 40 Oct. 26, joined Herb Gray, MP for Windsor West, in swelling the Trudeau cabinet to a record size of 30. Both are ministers without portfolio—a favorite Trudeau formula for breaking in new material. Mr. Stanbury's responsibility is to State Secretary Gerard Pelletier and especially in the area of citizenship.

SPONSORED REFORM

He's a strong proponent of bilingualism, an early Trudeau supporter and a man who feels deeply that "we could go a good deal farther in promoting a sense of Canadianism."

A native of Exeter, Ont., who grew up in St. Catharines, he practised law in North York after attending Osgoode law school. He served on the North York board of education for four years, the Metro Toronto school board and the Metro planning board.

Elected in 1965, he was given the immediate accolade often reserved for well-regarded newcomers of seconding the speech from the throne.

As a back-bench MP, he sponsored private bills calling for legal and divorce reform, for removal of birth-control offences from the Criminal Code, abolition of capital punishment and the outlawing of electronic eavesdropping.

Many of his interests involved subjects of special concern to Mr. Trudeau, especially legal reform and bilingualism.

He was co-chairman of a Toronto-for-Trudeau committee formed well in advance of the 1968 Liberal leadership convention. Later he served on the Trudeau national campaign committee and then acted as co-chairman of the convention committee that helped propel Mr. Trudeau to the top.

IMMERSED IN FRENCH

Mr. Stanbury, whose brother is Senator Richard Stanbury, president of the National Liberal Federation, was a founder of a program encouraging English-speaking MPs to learn French.

He himself has been "immersed" four times in French courses at College Militaire Royal, St. Johns, Que.

"Ontario high school French is just not adequate to the task," says Mr. Stanbury, who rejects any suggestion that he has become fluently bilingual.

His new job is for his old boss, Mr. Pelletier, whom he had been serving as parliamentary secretary. Now he has a special responsibility for the citizenship branch including social development activities that include Canada's diverse minority groups.

One major concern will be production of a government white paper on citizenship, reviewing the 1947 legislation and possibly outlining where it has fallen behind today's conditions.

A question of special interest to him, he said in an interview, is whether citizenship should be considered the right of a Canadian resident, or is something conferred at the discretion of a judge or federal cabinet minister.

AIDS INVOLVEMENT

Tied in with this is a concern about a lack of any appeal procedure in cases where citizenship is denied, and about preferential treatment for immigrants from Britain over others.

But Mr. Stanbury says he is equally enthusiastic about an entirely different aspect of his new position.

That involves assisting minority groups to join what Mr. Stanbury calls the mainstream of Canadian life. It also involves youth exchange programs, both inside and outside the country.

"We're concerned with Canadians whether they are Indians, Eskimos, Italians or black Haligonians," he says. "We want to help them become more deeply involved in Canadian society and the life of their communities."

He says he sees his task as promoting participatory democracy in the broadest sense, and that meant going much farther in fostering a sense of what it means to be a Canadian.

Mr. Stanbury has retained his residence in Toronto's Don Mills area for his wife, the former Miriam Voelker of Kitchener, and his four children. They met at the University of Western Ontario.

China Increasing Asian Forces

By STANLEY KARNOW

HONG KONG (WP) — Elements of the Chinese Communist army are reported to be operating on an increasing scale in northeastern Burma as well as in areas of Laos not far from the Thai border.

Western analysts here believe that the Communist military deployments which have escalated within recent months are primarily aimed at strengthening Peking's political leverage in the Southeast Asian countries adjacent to China.

According to informed sources, Chinese engineers and laborers are beginning to build a new road in Laos headed towards the Thai frontier. They have also been working for more than a year on another route linking China's Yunnan province to North Vietnam.

The new road, still in the surveying stage, will apparently run from Muong Sai to Pak Beng, a town on the Mekong River about 20 miles from Thailand. A recently constructed Chinese road links Muong Sai to the Yunnan province town of Mengla.

An estimated 5,000 Chinese troops equipped with mobile anti-aircraft batteries are reliably reported to be stationed inside Laos to defend some Chinese coolies working on the road projects.

In Burma, mwanwhile, Chinese soldiers are reportedly serving as advisers to a force of some 4,000 indigenous Communist insurgents opposed to General Ne Win's government in Rangoon.

The insurgents, whose ranks include Kachins, Shans and other ethnic groups, dominate the Burmese state of Kokang adjoining Yunnan and control other parts of the Chinese frontier region east of Namhkam.

They have also staged battalion-sized attacks against the old Burma Road as far south as the town of Kutkai, in the northern Shan state. The Burma Road was built during the Second World War as an American supply route to China.

In addition, Chinese Communist civilian cadres are said to be helping the insurgents to administer so-called "liberated" areas in the mountain jungles near the China border.

Unconfirmed reports say that Chinese Communist army units are patrolling the sector in Burma east of the Salween River in an effort to eliminate Chinese Nationalist irregulars who have been functioning there for 20 years.

The Nationalists, most of whom fled from China after the Communist takeover, are principally involved in transporting opium grown by local hill tribes down to Thailand.

The insurgent movement in northeastern Burma is apparently headed by Naw Seng, a Kachin reputed to have served during the Second World War in the U.S. office of strategic services, the precursor of the Central Intelligence Agency.

After the war, he joined the Burmese army but deserted in 1948 and went to China, where he acquired a Chinese wife and began mobilizing a rebel force by recruiting Kachins living in Yunnan.

There are an estimated 1.5 million Kachins in China, three times more than in Burma.

Naw Seng is believed to have returned to Burma in late 1967 or early 1968 at the head of a force of about 300 Kachins armed with Chinese weapons. Since then, his movement has grown more than tenfold.

In the view of analysts familiar with the situation in Burma, the Chinese decision to accelerate the Communist rebellion there was prompted by two main motives.

For one thing, China's relations with Burma have deteriorated sharply since mid-1967, when Chinese residents of Rangoon stimulated by Mao Tse-tung's cultural revolution tried to stage political demonstrations in the Burmese capital.

Their latent hostility to the Chinese aroused, Burmese mobs reacted by attacking Chinese schools, shops and other enterprises. Peking claimed that 50 Chinese, among them a diplomat, were killed in the riots.

Since then, with the abatement of the cultural revolution inside China, more pragmatic leaders in Peking have put out feelers designed to restore their formerly good ties with Burma. These feelers have been ignored, however.

As a consequence, the Chinese apparently decided to exert pressure on General Ne Win's government by stepping up Communist activity inside Burma.

But the pro-Peking Burmese Communists—known as the "white flags"—shattered themselves by conducting a murderous purge within their movement.

In the course of this purge, several of the movement's 20 central committee members were assassinated. The party leader, Thakin Than Tun, was killed by a young Communist slated for execution.

The Chinese therefore turned to the Communist Kachin insurgents as an alternative instrument. That Peking propaganda does not refer to the Kachines suggests that the Chinese may be leaving open the possibility of a rapprochement with the Ne Win regime.

TEAR SAVED WOMAN'S LIFE

LIVERPOOL, England (UPI) — Last Friday, Mrs. Kim Nevitt lay on a mortuary slab with a death tag around her wrist. Tuesday, the 23-year-old mother of three set up in bed, ate rice pudding, and laughed at herself for trying to commit suicide.

As the blonde former nightclub worker came out of a deep coma, her estranged husband stood beside her.

"I've been such a fool" said Kim.

She laughed with her husband, Frank, a 26-year-old laborer, asked him to "go and buy me the prettiest nightie you can find," and then told doctors she had taken an overdose of sleeping tablets because she missed her family.

Kim and her husband parted a year ago and her three young children were put in the care of local authorities.

•

"I wanted them back so much but I couldn't have them because I was living in digs," she said.

Kim was found on a lonely beach near Liverpool Friday. A coroner, finding no pulse, pronounced her dead and she was taken to a local mortuary.

A tear saved Kim's life.

A mortuary attendant noticed it rolling down her cheek and she was sped to the hospital.

"It was such a shock," said Kim. "When I first came around I discovered an identification tag around my wrist. It just said Waterloo mortuary on it and then my name."

Said a Liverpool hospital spokesman: "She wasn't expected to pull through. She's the miracle of the hospital."

AN EERIE HAPPENING

They Pull Logs Out of the Dark

Eight of MacMillan Bloedel Ltd.'s Vancouver Island divisions have added night logging to their operations.

The Northwest Bay and Menzies Bay divisions have night shifts carrying out all logging procedures under floodlights except grapple yarding.

●

Grapple yarding and other logging procedures are being done at night at Cameron, Shawnigan, Franklin River, Sproat Lake, Kelsey Bay and Port Hardy.

Night shifts are also working at the company's Queen Charlotte division.

Company officials say night logging is practical through the use of banks of powerful mercury vapor lamps, similar to those used in football stadiums.

Logs are yarded, loaded and trucked to tidewater by night. At the booming grounds the revolution continues as logs are sorted by species and grade—also under floodlights—and readied for towing to the forest products mills.

Why log at night?

"It's a matter of simple economics," explains Jim Trebett, MB's manager of logging. "Logging equipment is expensive. A single grapple yarder unit costs as much as $165,000 to $200,000; a big logging truck between $70,000 and $100,000.

●

"With that kind of investment, say, up to $250,000 tied up in equipment at only one logging "side" or operation within a logging division, and with the increasing cost of equipment, it's essential that we use the equipment as many hours a day as possible. Certainly we must use the equipment more than one shift of eight hours a day. And, of course, night logging creates jobs that didn't exist before."

With powerful lamps penetrating the forest darkness, all the procedures of logging, with the exception of falling and bucking (cutting the tree into the right lengths for the logging truck and the manufacturing mills), now are practical.

Trebett foresees two full shifts of loggers a day at all MB logging operations within a few years.

The Cameron Division, near Port Alberni, provides a graphic illustration of the new technique.

At 5:30 p.m., when the division's 70-man second shift comes on the job, the once silent woodlands come alive with the sounds of the night time logging show—the roar of truck engines, the whine of the rock drill punching through a new logging road, the beeping of the electronic signals to the yarders and loaders and, down on the booming grounds at tidewater, the growl of the boom scooters sorting logs.

●

At the logging site 12 mercury vapor lamps, mounted stadium-style, illuminate about 21,000 square feet of felled trees, men and equipment and the surrounding forest. Even in gloomy weather the lights cut through the darkness to distances up to 700 feet. Portable generators provide the electricity.

To the uninitiated who visit a night operation it's an eerie, almost supernatural, happening.

Loggers, bundled up well against the night chill, look more like miners as they go about their jobs with miners' lamps attached to their hard hats.

Back at the main camp, meantime, mechanics in the shops also work nights repairing equipment for the next day's shift.

●

Huge logging trucks, with tons of logs, make their runs back and forth from the logging site to the log dump and booming ground. At the booming ground 17 banks of lights, three of them mounted on floating rafts, bring the visibility almost to daylight level. The lights go on automatically at dusk, activated by a photo-electric cell.

Production under night logging conditions, MB has found, is only slightly less than that achieved during the day.

One slight problem was reported with the company's first venture into night logging and booming. The boom men found it difficult at first to identify the different log species under artificial light. With experience, however, they soon adjusted to the new conditions.

Schools Face Garbage Excess

DUNCAN — Garbage disposal in several district schools is piling up because of a reduction in janitorial staff, trustee B. C. Anand has told the school board.

The staff was cut in March following defeat of a school money bylaw. Anand suggested that maintenance superintendent George Routley be instructed to have a truck pick up the extra garbage. But this was a stop-gap measure.

"We will have to make some allowance about it in the next budget," Anand said.

Routley said the garbage is beyond the volume contracted for by C. W. Disposals and "they are asking to have this discussed."

Two Seats Open On School Board

GANGES — Two vacancies are assured on Gulf Islands School Board with the resignations of P. A. Frattinger of North Salt Spring and R. M. Patterson of South Salt Spring.

George Heinekey is seeking re-election Dec. 6. Chairman of the board, he has served for 12 years.

Mrs. Elizabeth Ross of Mayne Island has not decided whether to run for re-election. Her term expires in December. Nominations close Nov. 24.

J. M. Campbell of Saturna Island will seek to retain his seat on the board. A former chairman, now president of the B.C. School Trustees' Association, Campbell is a charter president of the Educational Research Institute of British Columbia.

DUNCAN — Well-known Canadian champion swimmer Mary Stewart will be one of the star attractions at a Sportmen's Dinner Friday night in aid of Operation Recreation's swimming pool fund.

Miss Stewart was named Canadian female athlete of the year in 1961 and 1962. She was a finalist in the 100-meter free style event at the Olympic Games in Rome After first representing Canada at the Pan-American Games in Chicago in 1959.

She again represented the country at the Pan-Am Games in Brazil in 1963 and was a finalist in the 100-meter butterfly competition at the Tokyo Olympics a year later.

WORLD RECORDS

Coached by Vancouver's Howard Firby, the 23-year-old athlete has held world records in the 100-meter and 110-yard butterfly.

Sister of Helen Stewart Hunt, also a world champion swimmer, Miss Stewart excelled in other fields as well. She is a talented modern dancer who has performed on procuetions of Carousel and musicals including Vancouver television, variety shows and Oklahoma.

She was team mascot to the British Columbia Lions from 1959 to 1963. A graduate of University of British Columbia, now teaching Grade 6 students at Sir Matthew Begbie School in Vancouver, she will have her old boss with her at the head table.

CALGARIANS FIND GOLDEN HANDLE

CALGARY (CP) — Bill Volk and Ron Kletke, two Calgary printers, say they have found a method of beating a tobacco company promotion gimmick and have collected $35,000 in winning cards.

The contest, sponsored by Imperial Tobacco Company Ltd., appears in Casino cigarettes.

In each package there was a card with a skill-testing question and 15 covered numbers, five of them identical.

If a purchaser uncovered five numbers and four were identical, he would win $5; if the five were all the same he could win $100.

If more than five numbers were uncovered the card was invalid; this was to prevent people from searching for winning combinations.

The men said the clue was in the skill-testing question.

They said they knew large runs of each question must be printed, giving a key to certain sequences of winning numbers.

After they determined a pattern, the men spent $2,300 buying all the cartons of the brand they could find.

They said the most recent stocks of the cigarette had the question deleted, but they were able to determine the older stocks by the serial number on the carton.

The men said the New York firm which supplies the cards sent two employees to Calgary in an attempt to have Volk and Kletke settle for less than the amount listed on the cards.

Volk, a non-smoker, said the only way they could be disqualified was if fraud was involved but there "hasn't been any."

Education Plan 'A Disaster'

OTTAWA (CP) — The increasing confusion and conflict in education could lead to "outright educational disaster" if continued into the 1970s, Colin B. Mackay, president of the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada said today.

Speaking at the association's annual meeting, Dr. Mackay, president of the University of New Brunswick, said the issue perplexing the public most is the continuing lack of any real co-operation between the different education levels.

"Elementary and secondary education remain ghettoed in our individual provinces where they lead a lonely existence detached from often unfriendly and disinterested post-secondary educational institutions which, by and large, continue to go it alone in the same old way," he said.

No one, from the prime minister down, appeared happy with the present arrangement.

There was little excess in a university budget. Since the bulk of it was salaries, it was wishful thinking to imagine that universities could make any substantial reduction in operating costs.

SUGGEST MORE EFFORT

"Surely, it is time that the federal government began to play a more aggressive and constructive role in our affairs —not on the basis of education, but on the sane and sound premise that it will contribute to national survival and international good will," he said.

As long as the 10 provinces continued in Confederation, he said, it should not be too much to ask that there be confederate goals for higher education and that ways be devised to implement them.

During the last 12 months, much of what had formerly been public apathy had turned into hostility. "Once the taxpayers counted up the frightening cost while listening to our cries for more, they began to conclude that our recent behavior and attitudes in many instances was such that we do not merit either sympathy or additional support."

As for students, most did not want power. They wanted communication. They were concerned about the larger issues such as population growth and pollution and yet in many instances were unable to find evidence of the university's concern.

ARROGANCE

"Much of the recent activity in our universities has smacked more of arrogance than good will," Dr. Mackay said. "It seems that too often everyone is complaining about everybody and everything." Instead of attacking principles, people attacked those who put them forward.

"This sort of thing can quickly degenerate into a brawl. Today we see it going on in all of our universities and this is making it increasingly difficult to reach decisions based on sane and rational principles."

If different segments of the university continued to act unilaterally "in a mood of mistrust and suspicion and fear," there was a possibility that if the institutions did survive, they would finish the next decade in a considerably altered form and with far less academic freedom than at present.

Ontario Balks At Travel Cost

Ontario is asking British Columbia for more details before agreeing to accept jobless migrants shipped back to their home province from B.C.

But E. R. Rickinson, B.C.'s deputy social welfare minister, says the province isn't changing its policy of sending back unemployed persons who want to return to Ontario.

"We're giving them (Ontario) all the information necessary now," Rickinson said Tuesday in an interview.

The new Ontario policy of asking B.C. to prove that each referral case is "good social policy" will have no impact on present procedures in the B.C. Social welfare department, Rickinson said.

Nobody is sent back unless it is good social policy, Rickinson said. Matters considered in each case include the employment situation for the individual and the presence of relatives in the province.

SUSPICIOUS

Rickinson said a substantial number of returnees—69 in the last six months—are in the 18 or under age bracket.

The Ontario government says it has no reluctance to accept these younger migrants back to Ontario.

But Ontario officials say they became suspicious that B.C. was using the procedure as a routine means of getting rid of social welfare recipients from Ontario.

Rickinson said that B.C. recieves four times as many welfare cases from Ontario as Ontario does from B.C. and that overall this province gets an "unfair share" of unemployed persons migrating from other provinces.

But he said relations among social welfare administrators in the provinces are good and that "repatriation" arrangements work smoothly most of the time.

SENT HOME

With the co-operation of their home provinces, persons are given transportation fare—usually by train—and sent home.

But Rickinson confirmed that some unemployed persons bounce back and forth among provinces "with government aid" as a form of travel subsidy.

Under the Canada Assistance Plan there are no length of residency regulations for welfare recipients but such persons can be sent back to their home province under the plan if the provinces agree.

Ontario officials say fewer than six persons under the age of 18 were shipped back to B.C. in the past year.

Rickinson said his figures don't show a breakdown by age but he denied that B.C. "just dumps" people back into Ontario.

NO FORCE

He said efforts might be made in some cases to convince people that a return to a home province would be the best thing for them but nobody is forced to leave.

This fall young migrants are kept in a Vancouver hostel rather than being given cash grants so there are fewer of them than in previous years, he said.

In the past few years the then social welfare minister, Dan Campbell, has made appeals to "hippies" and others on their way to B.C. to think twice before coming here.

A B.C. government request for special financial help from Ottawa to handle the net input of migrants has resulted in no action for a number of years, Rickinson pointed out.

The Ontario government also complains about the costs resulting from that province's inflow of jobless migrants, particularly from the Maritimes and Quebec.

Man Sentenced

MISSION (CP)—Dennis Alfred Jean Baptiste Dubois, 34, of this Fraser Valley community was sentenced Tuesday to 60 days in Oakalla prison for leaving the scene of an accident after he struck down Mrs. Freda Howarth on Halloween night.

CENTENNIAL FESTIVITIES will take place in British Columbia again in 1971 when the province will celebrate the 100th anniversary of its entry into Canadian Confederation on July 20, 1871. Sixty-nine of the province's leaders met at the Empress Hotel Monday for an inaugural meeting. Among them were, left to right; vice-chairman T. F. (Bill) Orr of Vancouver, general chairman, deputy provincial secretary Lawrie Wallace; Minister of Highways W. D. Black and Recreation Minister W. K. Kiernan.

Fees 'Not Public Funds'

By BRUCE YEMEN

Are the medicare premiums paid by B.C. residents public funds when they are paid to doctors for services rendered?

Dr. G. Scott Wallace, Social Credit MLA for Oak Bay, doesn't think so.

The provincial government apparently does, Wallace said Tuesday when asked about a cabinet decision to have the Medical Services Commission make public its payments to doctors under the medicare plans which started July 1, 1968.

"If the government believes the system of premium payments is equivalent to public funds, I imagine it is their right to force disclosure," Wallace said.

An order passed by the cabinet puts the Medical Services Commission in the same position as a number of other public agencies in the province regarding disclosure of payments by the body.

This means that doctors who receive more than $500 in a year under the medicare plan will have their payments published by the medical services commission, in the same way that universities, municipalities and other public agencies issue records of payments made.

Wallace, who sponsored a unanimously-adopted resolution against such disclosure at a B.C. Medical Association convention last month, objected strongly to any sugestions in the move that doctors are being paid out of public funds "in the same way as civil servants."

"We are self-employed individuals who negotiated with the provincial government on a certain fee schedule."

He said that any attempt by the government to change the schedule unilaterally could result in a "critical situation."

"More important than whether these payments are to be regarded as public information is that we as doctors are not by any stretch of the imagination to be regarded as public servants," Wallace said.

Students Too Shy To Seek Help

By JANE CHAPIN

What does a student do when he discovers he's failing a course at University of Victoria?

If he has the courage, he asks his professor for help; together they work something out. Often a few sessions after class are sufficient and occasionally the professor recommends that the student hire a private tutor.

But what happens to the student too shy to speak up?

"A goodly percentage of the freshmen taking beginning linguistics courses are shy," says Dr. Geoffrey O'Grady, associate professor of linguistics.

"Out of 100 students maybe 10 will fall behind. Some of these stop coming to class."

O'Grady admits students afraid to seek extra help at Uvic would have difficulty finding it.

NONE ASK

"If students asked I could suggest names of graduate students willing to tutor. None have asked."

The 10 per cent at the bottom of a class often are under emotional strain, notes John Davis, a linguistics graduate student.

For their benefit he advises that in class the professor suggest names and phone numbers of tutors. Students who need help quietly could copy down the names without embarrassment.

Yet this method brings up a question, whether a failing student must cope with problems on his own or whether the university is responsible for removing the emotional strain caused by confrontation with a professor.

A spokesman for the French department thinks responsibility lies mostly with the student.

DOESN'T CARE

"The fault lies with the student. A failing grade almost always means the student doesn't care. Our professors are more than willing to give a lot of time and, if a personality clash ever arises, we send the student to another instructor."

Meanwhile, students continue to drop out of Uvic at the rate of about seven per cent a year, according to registrar office statistics.

"No one knows why they drop out. A multitude of problems, financial, home, personal, etc. are cited but we don't know the reasons in individual cases," says Registrar R. J. P. Ferry.

But the question remains unanswered. Should the university cut down drop-out statistics by setting up a remedial program for failing students or should students be treated as adults and left to sink or swim?

REMEDIAL PROGRAM

Two departments on campus, English and mathematics, have remedial programs.

Every student attending Uvic must take English 100, a first-year literature and composition course. Early in the term a test is given and students who do poorly are placed in special sections to build their writing skills.

"A few students whose mother tongue is not English might get through but if they still need help they can take a special course in linguistics," says Dr. Roy F. Leslie of the English department.

The mathematics department has a word-of-mouth program spread all over campus. Mrs. Elizabeth Kennedy, an associate professor, acts as unofficial ombudsman between students and faculty.

TUTORS LISTED

In her office is a list of some 25 third and fourth year undergraduates with a high B average or better who want to tutor. A student pays the going rate—$2 per hour for tutoring—and if he's not learning from his coach, Mrs. Kennedy supplies another.

"This is the most outstanding remedial program on campus," says Dr. E. N. Foord, acting director of the university's counselling centre.

Last year the mathematics department tried using group tutorials in which students asked questions. "But the students were so badly off they didn't know what to ask," says Mrs. Kennedy.

She quoted that out of 1,500 students taking math courses between 50 to 75 need tutors.

When asked whether it is fair to have so many students needing a tutor to pass a beginning course, Mrs. Kennedy replied: "The purpose of first and second year at university is to find out what you're good at."

79-Year-Old Fined $50 For Theft

A 79-year-old man with a history of heart trouble, stroke and diabetes was fined $50 in provincial court Tuesday after he was convicted of stealing goods from Capital Iron and Metals Ltd.

No one could help but feel sympathy for the physical condition and age of Gauis Seymour, 446 Obed, said Judge William Ostler.

But two points in evidence particularly caught the judge's ear.

Seymour, in giving evidence, denied asking a store detective to let him pay for a screwdriver, two valves and bushings worth a total of $4.57 he had put in his pockets.

NOT ALLOWED

He told the judge he knew people were not allowed to do that.

And store detective Mrs. Grace Kembell told the court the elderly man had looked about him before pocketing the goods Sept. 19.

Seymour's doctor said his paitent was afflicted with poor memory and judgment.

"He would not know at times what was right or wrong."

Judge Ostler said there had been no evidence or disorientation at the time of the incident and the accused had showed astuteness in his court appearance today.

He was levying a reduced fine because he believed Seymour's family will take greater care of him.

Checks Recommended

VANCOUVER (CP) — A coroner's jury ruled Tuesday that the death last Thursday of Albert Paquette, 29, of Vancouver was natural due to complications of epilepsy and alcoholism. The jury recommended that hourly checks be made of inmates in the city jail drunk tank.

Findings Reported

VANCOUVER (CP)—A recent study by the Graduate Students' Association of the University of British Columbia said hiring of non-Canadian professors by Canadian universities is making it increasingly difficult for Canadian graduates to get university jobs in their own country.

HOME GARDEN

Planning Should Be Family Affair

By HILDA BEASTALL

The soil is now well moistened with rain but in most gardens it still is not soggy. Coupling this condition with the fact that November is the best month for planting nearly all trees and shrubs, adds up to a splendid opportunity to start a new garden or remake an old one you find unsatisfactory.

Hilda

Whichever is the case, start with a bit of a plan on a large piece of paper or cardboard. If brown paper happens to be the largest sheet around, you can use a heavy B lead pencil or a dark crayon.

Mark the house area, noting foot length of walls on all four sides. This gives something basic to work from.

Put in more or less permanent features which you wish to retain. For a large tree draw a larger circle than for a small tree. A large shrub should have a similar circle.

Decide if you want a sunny play area for children or whether it would be better in a circular spot beneath a large tree which loses its leaves in fall and gives a shaded area in summer.

A similar spot could be designated as a relaxation area. Consider making a solid base here of stone, paving, cement or wood.

Remember not all gardens need a clothesline post in modern living. This gives more freedom for planting trees and shrubs at the back of the house. A detail like this can change an existing layout giving overall improvement in appearance.

The vegetable plot must be in open sunshine. While a few fruits and vegetables will grow in a partially shaded warm spot, the majority including all root and vine crops require sun for most of the day. Flavor and color, and indeed growth itself depends on having sunshine on the leaves of these food crops.

Plan with the suggestions of the family. Don't expect them all to have something useful to offer at the first session, but get them to help measure the house walls and other distances and let them see you are making a serious plan for their benefit.

The second session with the plan should net some ideas. See that you, as head of the house, do not throw them all out.

Try to incorporate a worthwhile feature or two which may have a multiple purpose—that is, useful or of interest when the originator of the thought may no longer be living full time at home.

A participating home life is pleasant to remember.

Reasons Outlined For Spastic Colon

By DR. WALTER ALVAREZ

One of the commonest causes of distress in the abdomen of many nervous persons is an overly-sensitive and mucus-forming colon. We physicians should try hard to avoid the terms mucous or spastic colitis, because this is really not what the trouble is: there is no inflammation of the bowel, but the trouble is that the person's nerves are playing tricks with it. Since the ending "itis" has come to mean inflammation, it would seem best not to use the term for the naiming of a disease in which there is no inflammation. This only confuses and frightens a patient.

Many a woman has come to me, much alarmed because a physician had shown her X-ray films of her colon and pointed to little out-pouchings as signs of spasm and colitis. Actually, such pouches are nearly always harmless, and are found in the colons of perhaps four of 10 elderly persons. Or a physician has told the woman that her colon is too big or too long or poorly rotated; and this is unfortunate, because such variations in the bowel are found in almost all people, and the chances are small that they produce any symptoms.

In most cases, when a woman comes to me with the diagnosis of "mucous colitis," I find that her symptoms are arising in her brain, and I first have to spend time assuring her that the bowel is normal, and that if she were to have her abdomen opened and explored, the colon would look perfectly normal, just like that of any healthy person.

I think the sensitive colon or the tendency to get attacks of discomfort in it is usually inherited, and the bowel tends to remain sensitive throughout all of the affected person's days. Perhaps the essential point is that it is a colon which responds easily to emotion and to nervous tension.

With a little excitement, the bowel can fill with gas, and can become very uncomfortable. Many people have symptoms so mild that they never complain of them to a doctor; others have much more severe symptons, and in them the attacks may come frequently, and cause much discomfort.

★ ★ ★

One of the commonest causes of discomfort is going to dinners with others, or having guests come into the home. Especially in the cases of young persons, going out on a date can bring on an attack. Some persons get a flare-up when they eat some food to which they are allergic, and some get distress as the first sign of an approaching cold.

Some upset their bowel by taking laxatives, or by letting themselves get constipated. Many a gassy spell can be stopped in a minute with a bowel movement. Many nervous women suffer from a sore colon most of the time, and in them, the abdomen is tender to pressure. Some persons are comfortable for weeks at a time, and then they get an acute spell that lasts for hours or a few days.

★ ★ ★

Often a woman will say that her trouble is diarrhea, but with a few questions I learn that this is not quite true. What she has is a feeling of urgency, or a gassy feeling.

Sometimes a teaspoonful of paregoric or ½-grain of codeine will stop the formation of the gas and fluid mucus for hours, and this will permit the woman to go out to dinner without suffering tortures. Going to bed and falling asleep is also likely to put an end to the formation of gas and mucus, but sometimes there will be a residue of the trouble present the next morning.

FLASHBACK ON CANADA

PM Resigned Owing To Bribery Charge

By BOB BOWMAN

This is the anniversary of the worst day in Sir John A. Macdonald's political career. His government had to resign because he and Sir George Etienne Cartier had solicited election campaign funds from Montreal financier Sir Hugh Allan, when Allan was trying to get the contract to build the first transcontinental railway. It looked like bribery.

Sir John defended himself in a five-hour speech in the Commons. It was perhaps the most brilliant speech he ever made although he had been drinking heavily for weeks and was shaken in mind and body. His purpose was to try to rally the members of his own party so they would support him in a vote of confidence.

It was known that the best he could hope for was a majority of two, and the man who could save him was the former Hudson's Bay Company factor, Donald A. Smith. He was a Conservative who represented Selkirk in the federal House, and Winnipeg in the Manitoba legislature. He had been Sir John's personal representative in dealing with Louis Riel during the Red River uprising.

Smith, who later became Lord Strathcona, was at Fort Carlton on the Saskatchewan River when Sir John sent him an urgent message to come to Ottawa and support the government. Smith made a record trip to the capital and took his seat in the Commons on the night of Nov. 4, 1873. It seemed that the government would be saved from defeat, and Conservatives applauded when he rose to speak. He opened by saying that he was convinced that the prime minister was incapable of taking money from Allan for corrupt purposes, but then he added that he could not vote for the government conscientiousy.

Sir John jumped to his fect and roared that he "could lick that man Smith quicker than hell could frizzle a feather," and there was an uproar.

The government resigned on Nov. 5 and Liberal leader Alexander Mackenzie became Canada's second prime minister. An election in January gave the Liberal government a majority of 60 seats.

Somehow Sir John survived the disaster and was returned as prime minister five years later.

Other events on Nov. 5:

1653 — Iroquois signed peace treaty at Quebec.

1803 — Weekly public markets were established at York (Toronto).

1814 — U.S. troops destroyed their own base at Fort Erie.

1817 — Chippewas surrendered nearly 2 million acres in present-day Ontario.

1856 — Montreal damaged by violent hurricane.

1889 — Province of Quebec paid Jesuits $400,000 and Protestants $60,000 under the Jesuits Estates Act.

1905 — Liberals won first election in Alberta.

1917 — Use of grain prohibited in manufacture of liquor during war.

1923 — Alberta voted for government control of liquor after seven years of prohibition. Longest drydock in the world (at that time) opened at Saint John, N.B.

KARPIN ON BRIDGE

By FRED L. KARPIN

In 1931-32, the famous Culbertson-Lenz match took place. This was a match of 150 rubbers between Mr. and Mrs. Culbertson, and Sidney Lenz and Oswald Jacoby. It was won by the Culbertsons, resulting in the establishment of the Culbertson System as the order of the day (and the decade that followed).

In one of the deals, a preemptive bid by Oswald Jacoby pushed the Culbertsons to a theoretically unmakable small slam. However, the slam would have been fulfilled easily if Jacoby had not gotten off to what he thought was a deceptive lead.

North-South vulnerable. South deals.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East

3 NT	Pass	4 ♣	Pass
4 ◇	Pass	4 ♡	Pass
4 NT	Pass	5 ♣	Pass
5 NT	Pass	6 ◇	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Six of ♠.

Sitting North was Ely Culbertson. South was his wife, Josephine.

Using correct standards, the North-South bidding is difficult to explain. However, in its defence, one might say that North and South were goaded into unwarranted positive action by Jacoby's weak jump overcall. This weak jump overcall, incidentally, has become accepted by our contemporary experts as a highly practical harrassing weapon. In the 1930s, the bid was frowned upon by our bridge-playing society, since it was not accepted by the nation's constituted authority, Ely Culbertson.

Jacoby, on lead, had no clue from the bidding as to what the winning opening lead might be. After long deliberation, he came to the conclusion that North probably possessed a spade suit headed by the A-Q. So he elected to open a low spade, to create the illusion that he might have a singleton in that suit; and to thereby talk declarer out of taking the finesse against the king.

Lenz, quite naturally, won this trick with his ace and, assuming that Jacoby had led a singleton, he returned a spade. Jacoby's king now took the setting trick.

Steve picked up the cheque. "It's $27.79 for the lot," he declared. "Let's all share evenly."

"Okay by me," Charlie nodded. "But what about a tip for the waiter?"

"That's included as a service charge," replied Steve. "And the total divides equally among us."

How much would each share be?

Tonight's Top Television Shows

YOUNG SINGER Browning Bryant joins host Eddy Arnold on the Kraft Music Hall tonight at 9, Channel 5. Also on the show will be Met pitcher Tom Seaver and "Laugh-In's" Judy Carne, the Lettermen. The latter do a pleasing version of "Shangri-La".

MOVIE TO WATCH is at 9, Channel 4, "A Man and a Woman". A visually stunning, superbly acted, and ultimately very moving contemporary love story. Anouk Aimee gives a haunting and profoundly touching performance of a young widow falling in love. She is aided by the direction of and inventive camera work of Claude Lelouch, and by her co-star Jean-Louis Trintignant as a racing-car driver who woos her. There are two particularly expert performances by some scene-stealing children—his daughter and her son.

NATURE OF THINGS. 7.30, Channel 2, the first of 10 programs examining Canada's achievements in medical research during the last decade covering such topics as genetics, cancer-cell research, drug developments and organ transplants. Tonight: "A Day in the Life of a G.P."

SPECIAL "SINATRA." 9, Channels 7, 12. For his fifth special, Sinatra works alone, a refreshing change from all the other guest-packed musical shows. The voice may be a little huskier, but the man still has all his visual punch, mixing old songs like "Please Be Kind," "Street of Dreams" and "Come Fly With Me," with the new. Sinatra's version of "Little Green Apples" proves he's not out of step, and he even has the courage to follow it with a Rod McKuen poem.

THE BEVERLY HILLBILLIES. 8.30, Channels 7, 12, Conman Phil Silvers returns for another round of gulling the rich Clampetts. As Shifty Shafer, Silvers plans to sell Jed the island of Manhattan in bits and pieces, with special rates for Central Park, the Staten Island Ferry, and other choice locations. Again, Silvers does most of the talking, playing his old TV character in mufti.

BOOK BEAT. 8.30, Channel 9, Jessica Mitford discusses "The Trial of Dr. Spock" based on her observations (as a reporter) of the controversial 1968 trial. Dr. Spock was convicted of conspiring to aid draft dodgers but a court of appeal overturned the conviction more than a year later.

JOHNNY CARSON. 8:30, Channels 2, 6. Johnny steps from behind the desk in this hour-long special to show his rare talents for breakup comedy. Featured are George C. Scott, Maureen Stapleton and Marian Mercer.

THE COURTSHIP OF EDDIE'S FATHER. 8, Channel 4, "Bully For You." A cute idea, and well presented on this pleasant series. Eddie has trouble with a school bully who keeps bopping him, and the bully happens to be a blond tomboy named Joey. Eddie's father invites Joey to dinner, and between Mrs. Livingston and him, Joey learns a few things about the fair sex.

TONIGHT'S MOVIES

7:30: Channel 8: To Kill a Mockingbird (1963 drama). Gregory Peck, Mary Badham, Phillip Alford.

9:00: Channel 4: A Man and a Woman (1966 drama). Anouk Aimee, Jean-Louis Trintignant.

11:40: Channel 2: Bachelor Mother (1939 comedy). Ginger Rogers, David Niven.

12:00: Channel 6: To Kill a Mockingbird (1962 drama). Gregory Peck.

12:00: Channel 8: Notorious (1946 mystery). Ingrid Bergman, Cary Grant.

1:05: Channel 5: Hangman's Knot (1952 western). Randolph Scott.

1:30: Channel 7: The Purple Mask (1955 adventure). Tony Curtis.

1:30: Channel 13: Dishonored Lady (1947 drama). Hedy Lamarr.

"SAM, TURN ON THE BLUE LIGHT. THE MAN WANTS A BLUE BOAT.
There's a wrong way to sell a boat. And a right way. The right way is only a little harder.
We think a man who's going to take his family or friends out in a boat deserves some candor. So when we sell you a Bertram or some other good boat, we'll tell you what they are. And what they aren't.
We'd rather make a fast friend than a fast buck.

100 CARS FOR SALE

People who buy Mercedes-Benz automobiles appreciate a fine machine and know how to care for one. That's why the cars they trade in are usually far above average. Before you buy a used car take the time to look at the ones on our lot—we think you'll be glad you did. Whether you're looking for a roomy station wagon, a sports sedan, or a small second car we may have the car you're after. We have a 1968 Pontiac Laurentian station wagon. It's a V-8 equipped with automatic, power steering and brakes, radio, vinyl interior, and rear window defogger, and is priced at $3,175. One of the few true sports sedans is the Rover, and we have a lovely 1966 Rover 2000 previously owned by a doctor. We've installed a new clutch and new radial ply tires and have priced it at $2,250. For a second car we recommend an Austin 1100. It's a 1967, has a radio, and is priced at $1,300. Or how about a very smart black 1958 Jaguar 3.4 automatic priced at $1,050? Whatever kind of vehicle you're looking for, may we suggest that you drop into Three Point Motors located at the north end of Government Street, where it joins Douglas Street and meets Hillside Avenue.

Huge Oil Tanker Sinking at Sea

BOSTON (AP) — The 629-foot Liberian tanker S.S. Keo split in half and began sinking today in heavy seas 120 miles southeast of Nantucket Island, the United States Coast Guard said.

Thirty-six men were aboard, and a coast guard spokesman said he understood most had taken refuge on the stern of the ship.

There was no immediate word on the loss of life.

'White Man Is Attracted To the Forbidden Fruit'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Grace Halsell is a slender white woman who changed her skin to black and quit a White House job to live as a Negro for six months in the Harlem district of New York City and Mississippi.

Now the darkness faded from her body but with more wrinkles around her eyes, she reflects and is shaken.

"I lived as a black for six months," she said Tuesday in an interview. ". . . All my white friends say 'Oh, you're so brave.'

"But no one is telling the black woman she's brave and she lives with it all the time."

In a new book, Soul Sister, she tells of her motivations, of keeping her travels a secret from former President Lyndon Johnson, her co-workers and her family, and of her determination to record a personal account.

And she describes some of the incidents:

"A white intern in a Harlem hospital refused to treat her swollen and burned foot, telling her: 'You people should bathe more often'."

● She was arrested for disturbing the peace when she asked permission to use a telephone at a bus station in Indianola, Miss. She had crossed over from the no-longer marked but still "colored" section into the "white" section.

● A bank official came home from work early when his wife was gone and attacked Miss Halsell, who was working as a $3-a-day domestic.

"The white man has always gone in for night-time integration," she says.

"He said black is ugly and bad but yet he's attracted to the forbidden fruit."

A descendant of slave-holders in Texas, she grew up in Lubbock and worked on newspapers in Fort Worth before travelling to the Far East and to South America to live and work.

Returning to the United States, she was disturbed that many whites still saw all blacks as automatically inferior. In January, 1968, after having worked for Johnson for three years, she read "Black Like Me", a 1959 account by another Texan, John Howard Griffin, who dyed his skin black and travelled in the South.

Telling no one in her family or at the White House, she acquired black contact lenses, a sun tan and just before quitting her job bottles of pills of the drug psorlen to step up the melanin process and darken her skin to a deep chocolate.

She says her return to Washington and to the white world was traumatic. She burst into tears when she stepped on to the thick carpet of her apartment.

For two months she wrote in seclusion while her blackness faded.

Quebec School Bill Wins Easily

QUEBEC (CP)—The people who often describe themselves as representatives of Quebec's moderate majority spoke up Tuesday night.

The national assembly of Quebec voted 89 to 5 to endorse the principles of the Union Nationale government's language bill.

The Liberal Opposition joined with the government to vote second reading of Bill 63, target of several student demonstrations in Quebec.

The vote was the first by the assembly guaranteeing Quebec parents the right to choose English or French schools for their children.

This principle has been under attack since 1968 when a school board in the Montreal suburb of St. Leonard made a move toward French-only instruction.

The assembly is expected to resume study of the language legislation Thursday and a procedural battle is in the offing.

MAY BE OUSTED

The five dissidents in the 108-seat house included two rebel government backbenchers whose negative votes could cost them their party membership.

Antonio Flamand (UN—Rouyn-Noranda) and Jerome Proulx (UN—St. Jean) ignored party policy to vote against the bill.

Premier Jean-Jacques Bertrand told reporters that the bill represents government policy and that the caucus would decide what to do with the rebels.

Others who voted against the bill were Rene Levesque, leader of the separatist Parti Quebecois, Yves Michaud (Ind—Montreal Gouin) and Gaston Tremblay (Ind—Montmorency).

Mr. Michaud, a 39-year-old journalist, quit the Liberal caucus last week rather than vote for the bill during second reading.

Mr. Flamand, a 36-year-old teacher, said the bill would only speed up the process of Anglicization of French Canadians.

Mr. Proulx, 39, another teacher, somersaulted politically, first announced he would vote for the bill, then said he would vote against it.

His self-described confusion arose from Premier Bertrand's announcement that there will be two government amendments.

One amendment would empower the Office de la Langue Francaise to encourage Quebec employers to make French the working language in industry.

The other amendment would invite immigrants to choose schools of Quebec's French-speaking majority.

Apparently satisfied, Mr. Proulx said he would vote for the bill. But less than two hours later he changed his mind.

Two other dissident backbenchers, Denis Bousquet (UN—St. Hyacinthe) and Fernand Grenier (UN—Frontenac), walked out prior to the vote.

APPLAUD VOTE

The vote in favor of Bill 63, an act to promote the teaching of French in Quebec, was accompanied by desk-thumping applause of most members.

Immediately after the vote, Mr. Michaud presented a motion, seconded by Mr. Levesque, to refer the bill to the constitutional committee.

Speaker Gerard Lebel said he would announce his decision on the acceptability of the Michaud motion Thursday.

The dissidents can be expected to wage a procedural battle in an attempt to delay or block passage of the bill.

The Liberal Opposition plans to introduce amendments to elevate French to a position of priority over English, but the government has the force to push the bill through the house against the existing opposition.

Standing in the 108-seat assembly is: Union Nationale 58, Liberals 45, independent 4, vacant 1.

Her Life Is One Big Bust

HONOLULU (AP) — Alexandra the Great is a stripper with a 48-inch bust and a big problem.

"I can't lead a normal life," she complains. "If I want to go to the beach it's ridiculous."

Alexandra says the deeply endowed figure that made her an entertainer is just a pain in the neck offstage.

"My clothes cost me twice as much as the ordinary girl," she says "Bras cost me between $20 and $30, all specially made.

★ ★ ★

"I'm seriously considering having my breasts made smaller surgically when I'm no longer an entertainer."

Alexandra was born Geraldine Paredes 28 years ago in St. Louis.

Because her father was a band leader and her mother a singer, show business was difficult to shun for a red-haired girl with a 48-25-42 figure.

★ ★ ★

"I tried dancing and then singing," she says. "But I soon realized that if I didn't take something off, the club managers would take me off."

Alexandra, headlining the show at a local club, became an exotic dancer at 18. She finds the work distasteful and plans to retire this Christmas when she weds army Capt. Bill San Hamel.

"I dislike nudity," she says, "I'm a big sex symbol, yes, but I'm also a person. It's starting to bother me, having to bare my body in front of people."

'Flash in the Pan' Fame Doesn't Bother 'Real' Alice

By MARY ELLENMYRENE

NEW YORK (AP) — Call it bad timing or simply the lady's prerogative. But just before people found out about Alice's Restaurant, Alice sold it.

"That whole scene is over anyway," theorizes the celebrated hippie chef, propped next to a suitcase still unpacked from a trip to the Caribbean. "It could never happen again."

She isn't complaining.

Emerging from often unhappy obscurity to a lucrative reign as one of the most publicized ladies of folk legend, Brooklyn-born Alice Brock, 28, has what she modestly calls "a flash in the pan" going for her.

It got its beginning in 1967, when Woody Guthrie's minstrel son Arlo cranked out a song called Alice's Restaurant Massacree, an 18-minute blues talk tale partly about Alice's frustrating attempts to keep house in a church full of hippies while running her beanery in Stockbridge, Mass.

While Alice was finding the situation mostly miserable, more than 400,000 other people were delighted enough to buy Guthrie's record.

WOULDN'T MAKE MOVIE

Then Alice's story was fashioned into film by director Arthur Penn, who persuaded most of the original characters to relive the legend in a production entitled simply, Alice's Restaurant.

Although Alice, a pretty, bronze-skinned brunette, turned down a starring role in the movie — "that's one ego trip I don't want to take"—she hasn't exactly been sitting on her apron strings.

Drawing on the advice of New York financiers who know how to put mileage on success, she already has published a cookbook and is completing plans for a chain of franchised restaurants in New York, Los Angeles and Chicago.

But probably the best fringe benefit, by Alice's own measure, is the new independence that has accompanied her good fortune and fame.

Divorced and now a homeowner in Stockbridge, she seems largely unimpressed with everything else.

"With all this publicity, I guess people can have opinions about me without ever knowing me . . . and that's a little strange," she says.

"But as far as I'm concerned, things really haven't changed that much. I'm just fooling around now, doing what I want. I know I'm moving. I don't know where."

WORKED AS LIBRARIAN

Raised in Brooklyn, she was by her own admission a "difficult" child whose early bent toward non-conformity led eventually to a stint in reform school.

Upon completing high school, she enrolled at Sarah Lawrence, a properish Eastern school for women.

She returned two years later to New York, where she met and married Ray Brock, a young architect. They moved to Stockbridge to take jobs at a local prep school, Ray as a carpentry teacher and Alice as a librarian.

The jobs lasted only a year—"it was very straight work"—but it was long enough for the Brocks to attract a large following of young friends. Leaving the school for summer work at a youth hostel on Martha's Vineyard, they invited some of their students to follow and drew a shaggy-haired batch of 18 boys, including Guthrie.

It was then that everyone decided to stay in Stockbridge and with the help of Alice's mother, the Brocks bought a deconsecrated Episcopal church, opening the ground floor to their friends and reserving the steeple for themselves.

MONEY A PROBLEM

That was in the spring of 1966 and was probably the happiest time of all for the loosely-knit family of usually a dozen or more teen-agers. How their dream disintegrated is the theme of the story that made Alice famous.

Money was problem, and one left largely to Alice to solve. Again drawing on her mother's reserves, she bought a small restaurant set unobtrusively at the end of a small alley off Stockbridge's only store-front street.

A long, narrow room bordered at one end by an antiquated kitchen, the restaurant maintained a regular clientele of outside "straights" as well as Alice's friends.

She finally sold the restaurant in 1967 after owning it less than a year.

There were, of course, bright moments. And one of the most memorable was the Brocks' Thanksgiving Day feast, a friendly affair that packed the church and supplied Guthrie with material for Alice's salvation song . . . The Massacree.

TWO WERE ARRESTED

Guthrie and a friend, offering to clear away garbage after the dinner, dumped the refuse down a small canyon after finding the regular city dump closed for the holidays.

Both were arrested for "litterbuggin'" by the now famous Stockbridge police officer William J. Obanhein, a soft-spoken man who still speaks of the incident with grinning embarrassment. The charges eventually were dropped.

Alice and Ray were divorced in October of 1968. Ironically, it was the same month Penn began filming his movie in the Brock church, with Alice acting as a consultant.

Alice now spends most of her time at her new home—a small, comfortable farmhouse bordering lush, green meadowland 10 miles north of Stockbridge. Guthrie and many of her other friends own property nearby.

And Alice's Restaurant?

Owned by two bachelor brothers from eastern Massachusetts, it still serves a good cheeseburger for 50 cents. But it isn't Alice's anymore.

PRINCESSES Anne and Alice, the latter the Countess of Athlone and president of the National Children Adoption Society, arrive at a London theatre for a gala performance of The Mad Woman of Chaillot which was staged in aid of the adoption society.

HOPE, MICHELE LEE

It's Roberta Revisited

By BOB THOMAS

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — A girl named Roberta has an irresistible allure for Bob Hope, as he demonstrates once again with his monthly television special Thursday night.

The Bob Hope Special on NBC will be another rendition of the Jerome Kern-Otto Harbach operetta, Roberta, which the comedian considers a good-luck talisman. The original Broadway version launched Hope on his way to fame.

The late Messrs. Kern and Harbach might have trouble recognizing the version which Hope presents Thursday night. The book will have numerous modern touches; only the songs will remain the same. And with tunes like Smoke Gets in Your Eyes, Lovely to Look At, Yesterday and You're Devastating, it's understandable why they're unchanged.

QUIT OVER SALARY

Hope talked about his long association with Roberta after returning from Dallas, where he taped the show at the new Bob Hope Theatre of Southern Methodist University. He first did the show on Broadway when the original version appeared in 1933-34. Two other newcomers were in the cast: George Murphy and Fred MacMurray.

"I got a lot of movie offers from the show, but I turned them all down," he recalls. "I was still nursing a grudge . . . because they didn't like the test I did in 1930.

"I stayed with Roberta until the summer, and then the producer wanted us all to work for scale (minimum salary) during the hot months. I had too many good offers to play movie houses on stage shows, so I cut out."

Hope did three more Broadway shows before going to Hollywood. He agreed to come west for Paramount to do The Big Broadcast of 1936, in which he was given a song called Thanks for the Memory.

In 1938, Hope returned to Roberta, playing the operetta in the Los Angeles Civic Light Opera opposite Carole Landis.

FOR GALLANTRY

The Victoria Cross was instituted in 1856 for individual acts of conspicuous gallantry in the presence of the enemy.

In 1958, Hope went back to the theatre and played Roberta in St. Louis to mark the 40th anniversary of the Municipal Light Opera. Hope performed the musical in one of his TV specials that fall.

Now it's Roberta revisited, with newcomers John Davidson and Michele Lee as co-stars.

"The show holds up just as good as ever," Hope says. "We played it straight through before the theatre audience, with local camera crews shooting it from the rear of the theatre. The audience was great, even when they were paying $1,000 a seat for charity."

Uncanny Scene Hits Los Angeles

LOS ANGELES (AP) — There are strange sights in the streets, parks and campaign grounds of the municipal area these days. People are picking up cans instead of throwing them away.

In the last few months, 7,000 can gleaners have rid the landscape of 6,000,000 metal containers.

Cans are pouring into a reception depot in suburban Commerce at the rate of 36,000 a day.

The gimmick: The cans are the aluminum variety, popular for packaging such things as beer, and the Reynolds Metals Co. is paying half a cent apiece for them

A club of altruists culls cans from apartment building trash and uses the proceeds for holiday dinners for the poor.

Youngsters comb parks, highways and streets to earn spending money.

There are even a few people picking up cans because they think an uncanny scene is prettier.

Sex Education Raises Problem

BIRMINGHAM, England (UPI) — The British Broadcasting Corporation's proposed sex education lessons for under 10-year-olds has raised the problem of homework, critic Margaret Bartlett told a local education group Monday.

"When you teach children to read and do arithmetic, you tell them 'Now, go and practice it'," Miss Bartlett said. "Obviously, there must be a change in approach."

Drugstore War On Drug Abuse

TORONTO (CP) — The newly-created Council on Drug Abuse in Canada will disperse advice on the dangers and uses of drugs at drug store information centres as part of a massive education program, it was announced Tuesday.

Nicholas Leluk, executive director, told an inaugural luncheon that the first step in a four-point action program would be creation of information centres in about 5,000 pharmacies across Canada.

Also planned are the preparation of films for television and theatre use, introduction of an education program for Grades 6 to 10 and involvement of pharmacy and medical students in universities in anti-drug programs.

Health Minister John Munro told about 400 persons attending the luncheon that the council represents a "major breakthrough" in dealing with "one of the most dangerous" problems in today's society.

The council, formed 18 months ago by members of the pharmaceutical industry, plans a general fund-raising drive to commence shortly and has issued an appeal for various businesses to underwrite "special projects" at a cost of $1,000 to $5,000 each.

OTHERS MAY JOIN

Mr. Leluk said in an interview that although the council now represents "the establishment," there are plans to offer general membership to young persons at a nominal fee.

Murray B. Koffler, council president, said the organization eventually may enter areas of research, rehabilitation and drug legislation but is primarily interested in preventive education.

Mr. Leluk said members of the Canadian Pharmaceutical Association generally are in agreement with plans to sell council memberships to pharmacists who would receive special kits containing information on the non-medical use of drugs.

This first phase of the program would begin with a pilot project among Ontario's 1,800 pharmacists and expand later across Canada, he said.

He also said the council probably would not distribute information on marijuana, at least initially, because there is no scientific evidence available on its effects.

CONDUCTS STUDY

In his speech, Mr. Munro reported that a research group at Halifax's Dalhousie University has been studying the effects of marijuana on animals for some months and that the federal government is "prepared to support . . . research on humans."

He said the Dalhousie group has marijuana available now for research but that no other group had applied for permission to do such reseach to his knowledge.

He said he anticipates the current federal inquiry commission into non-medical drug use may ask for permission to do research on humans and "it will be available."

The health minister said it would be "premature" and an "insult" to the commission to comment on whether he thought marijuana would be made legal.

He noted, however, that a "large percentage of the Canadian populace does not appreciate first offenders being given criminal records."

Drug Evil Doubled By Lengthy Terms

OTTAWA (CP) — Lengthy penitentiary sentences to young drug offenders are as destructive as the drugs themselves, a Calgary lawyer said in an impassioned Commons plea Tuesday night.

Eldon Woolliams (PC—Calgary North) urged the government to help create a compulsory educational program for youth to teach the perils of drug-taking and the "terrible jail sentences" they face if caught.

He was one of the concluding speakers during the eight-day throne speech debate which began Friday, Oct. 24. The Commons later approved by a voice vote the traditional address in reply to the throne speech.

Today the House returns to normal business with scheduled consideration of two bills arising out of the June 3 budget. They extend to the end of 1970 the three-per-cent surtax on personal and corporate income, and amend the customs tariff and the Excise Tax Act. Both were given routine first reading Tuesday.

In other business Tuesday, Prime Minister Trudeau tabled in the House the report of a three-man study group on government information services.

PROPOSES NEW AGENCY

It recommended creation of a new agency—Information Canada—to tell Canadians about their government. The report offered scathing criticism of existing information services and said it found many information officers unhappy in the service.

Mr. Woolliams accused Solicitor-General George McIlraith of attempting to mislead the House through his replies to questions by Mr. Woolliams earlier about the conviction and sentencing last week to a total of 29 years of seven Calgary youths on drug charges.

Manpower Minister Allan MacEachen, the only minister to enter Tuesday's debate, said the proposed white paper on social security, expected this session, will show what accommodation the government has made between the options of expanding present welfare schemes and establishing a guaranteed annual income.

Mr. MacEachen branded opposition speeches during the debate as examples of "obsessive negativism" and said non-confidence motions had been vague and general.

The government easily batted down four opposition non-confidence votes during the throne speech debate. It defeated Conservative motions 113 to 64 and 91 to 46, an NDP motion by 106 to 53 and a Creditiste confidence test 165 to 13.

Standing in the 264-seat Commons: Liberal 154, Conservative 72, NDP 22, Creditiste 14, Independent 1, vacant 1.

DEFENDS 'TRADITION'

Former prime minister John Diefenbaker entered the debate Tuesday with an attack on the government for chiselling away "our cherished traditions."

This was a reference mainly to the throne speech in which the Queen's name "was brought into it in a shabby and discourteous manner."

J. Angus MacLean (PC—Malpeque) praised the proposal in the throne speech to lower the voting age in federal elections to 18 from 21. But he was critical of a lack of proposals to deal with the "increasing dissatisfaction with life" of many Canadians.

He said Canada lags 20 years behind the U.S. on environmental control, 50 years behind Britain and 300 years behind Sweden.

Andre Fortin (Creditiste—Lotbiniere) said governments at all levels in Canada are not equipped to deal with urbanization. Chaotic conditions prevailed and in Quebec things had reached a point where teachers did not know when they next would be paid.

Science Finds Oil In Garbage Dumps

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Government scientists Tuesday reported an experimental process that promises to produce a barrel of crude oil from every ton of garbage.

The Bureau of Mines said this discovery could lead to "garbage and waste paper . . . one day becoming raw material for making gasoline and oil."

Research chemists at the coal research centre at Pittsburgh developed the new process while searching for ways to produce petroleum from coal.

★ ★ ★

Tests so far have been limited to laboratory-size runs, but officials said yields on a larger scale at the same ratio would produce just over one barrel of oil for each ton of organic waste.

Dr. Alexander Mills, Bureau of Mines scientist, said tests were still being conducted, but there was no question the oil produced could be refined into gasoline and other petroleum products.

The chemists heat-treated wet, ground up garbage and paper with carbon monoxide and steam under pressure at about 700 degrees fahrenheit for 20 minutes.

★ ★ ★

This converted 90 per cent of the organic material in the garbage and paper into a substance that was 40 per cent crude oil and 60 per cent water. Minor amounts of gas and ash also were produced and there was some unconverted material.

Iran May Win Oil War With Libya

By RALPH JOSEPH
CP Correspondent

TEHRAN (CP) — Iran, locked in a bloodless but bitter oil war with Libya, is hoping to steal a march over her arch-rival in the Middle East oil trade by building an 1,100-mile pipeline across Turkey to the Mediterranean.

She could thus eliminate the advantage Libya gained over her with the closure of the Suez Canal two years ago. By having direct access through the Mediterranean to the European markets, Libya is able to sell her oil in Rotterdam at 18 cents a barrel, compared to 51 cents a barrel which Iran must ask because of having to route her oil around the Cape of Good Hope.

When the new pipeline is ready, Iran will be able to sell her oil at 17.5 cents a barrel, which means that if the new Libyan rulers are planning to boost their oil prices now, as reported, they will be making a wrong decision at the wrong time.

The pipeline, estimated to cost $1,000,000,000, will start from the oilfields in southwest Iran and head directly north over the mountains to the Turkish border, when it will swing sharply west to the Turkish Mediterranean port of Iskenderun.

Politics Forced Longer Route

A shorter route would have been the direct one northwest over Iraq, Syria and Lebanon, but Iran rejected this on political grounds. Her relations with the Arab countries have been somewhat less than ideal, since she takes little pain to hide her jealousy over the oil successes of her Arab neighbors, most of whom have entered the market at her expense. The Arabs heartily return the dislike, but more on national than commercial lines since they have never forgiven Iran for recognizing Israel.

The Turks, on the other hand, have been steady allies since the Baghdad pact came into being and have special treaty relations with Iran under the Regional Co-operation for Development organization. But curiously, the present venture is not being planned under the RCD.

Turkey will be expected to raise part of the cost of the pipeline, since she will be earning about $20,000,000 annually from the line when completed. However, raising the billion is still going to be a tough proposition, for despite Iran's fat oil revenues, she just hasn't that much foreign exchange in her coffers to spare. The amount is equivalent to the entire oil revenues she is expecting this year from the foreign oil companies operating here, but that is being plowed back into the fourth five-year development plan.

There is talk of the construction costs being raised by loans "at reasonable rates" of interest. But no one is saying yet which loan-giving country is going to put up an amount so large, at a time when foreign loans in general are becoming scarce—unless some sort of consortium of countries offer to help.

Pay for Itself in Five Years

But Iran is perfectly confident about the economic prospects of the pipeline. It is estimated that a minimum of 50,000,000 tons of crude will have to be pumped through the pipeline to make it economically feasible. At any rate, the 42-inch pipeline, one of the largest in the world, will be expected to pump 40 per cent of Iran's oil to the European markets, the other 60 per cent going to south Asia and the Far East directly from the Persian Gulf.

The pipeline is expected to pay for itself within five years of its completion.

Iran meanwhile has an arrangement with the Soviet Union, whereby the Russians are building a gas pipeline 700 miles long and 42 inches in diameter at the base, running from the gas fields in south Iran to the Soviet Union.

An internal network of gas pipelines for Iran's domestic consumption will branch off from the main Iran-Soviet trunk line.

The delightful thing about this from the Iranian viewpoint is that the gas emerging from the country's reservoirs was formerly being flared. As one Iranian journal bitterly put it, it was "economic for the company operating the oil industry to dispose of the waste (gas) in this way." It estimated that some $858,000,000 has thus gone up in flames over the last 60 years.

However, not even the Russian trunk line will take care of all Iran's surplus gas. Some 845,000,000 cubic feet will be fed annually to the trunk line when it is ready next year, but even when home and foreign consumption doubles to 1,675,000,000 cubic feet by 1977, there will still be a surplus being flared.

Top U.K. Trader Eyeing Germany

By HAROLD MORRISON

LONDON (CP) — Britain's new trade chief has his eye on West Germany.

In former years the men who were appointed to head the vast portfolio of the board of trade spoke excitingly about Canada's prospects.

But Roy Mason, the new board president, figures that next to the United States, West Germany is Britain's most vital and most important market. And he figures that revaluation of the German mark has given Britain a bigger chance to push exports to that country.

Nevertheless he is aware of the "importance" of the Canadian market, the onetime coal miner said at his first news conference today. And he feels "we can do more" in trade promotion in Canada.

He plans to visit Canada next April—his first visit to that country—after he stops in California where Britain plans a major trade drive in 1970. The other big drive will be in Finland.

PROGRAM NOT FIRM

Asked whether he will promote greater Commonwealth trade, the 45-year-old Mason said he hopes to visit Australia and New Zealand and thereby "cover the old dominions." He also hopes to visit Southeast Asia to look over the trade potentials but he had no over-all program for Commonwealth trade as such.

The former minister of power has taken over a portfolio trimmed by last month's cabinet shuffle but he still has about 16,000 men working under him and he administers the big job of pushing exports, vital to Britain's recovery.

Mason said he plans an active role to visit export industries at home and to make more flying trips abroad. Britain will continue to pay 75 per cent of air fares for British business missions overseas and to increase to 75 per cent from 50 per cent the government's contribution on air fares of foreign business missions invited to Britain. British missions flying overseas now total about 250 a year compared with only 70 in 1965.

Other proposals announced by Mason include: An improved computerized export intelligence service tailored to the specific needs of individual exporters; more lines of trade credit for foreign governments; more personal export promotion by Mason himself and a closer look at ways of expanding invisible earnings, the money flowing in from tourists, shipping charges, interest and dividend payments, banking and similar non-commodity services.

Dolphins Need Licences To Perform

SCARBOROUGH, England (UPI) — Arty and Jenky, the performing dolphins, shook hands, kissed their trainer and played football at a local zoo. But their stellar trick—jumping through a flaming hoop—caused local animal lovers to complain to authorities.

In court Monday, the owners explained the intelligent dolphins would never perform unless they enjoyed their tricks. The judge agreed, and charges were dropped, but the zoo owner was advised to buy a performing licence for both dolphins.

Nuptials Elevated

LONDON (Reuters) — Two Japanese couples were married Tuesday during a 17½-hour flight from Tokyo to London. As their fellow passengers sang and drank champagne, Ken Takahashi and his brother Shunichiro married Natsujo Satoo and Mitzua Sajuma aboard a Japanese Airlines jet.

Uvic Chief Orders Canada-First Hiring

By BOB MITCHELL

Department heads at the University of Victoria have been directed by the president, Dr. Bruce Partridge, to "pursue" Canadian students in graduate schools in Canada and abroad to fill open teaching positions.

The announcement of the drive to get more Canadian faculty members is coupled with a survey released Tuesday showing that less than half of Uvic's 385 faculty members are Canadian, and more than one-quarter are United States citizens.

Partridge said in an interview with the Times that he had met earlier this fall with department heads and deans and directed them to advertise all vacant teaching positions in academic publications across Canada.

•

He also urged them to make full use of Operation Retrieval, a project initiated by the federal government to attract Canadian students in foreign universities back to Canada upon completion of their advanced degrees.

Partridge described the faculty hiring situation on Canadian campuses as one of "Canadians versus non-Canadians."

"This university and all Canadian universities should have a distinctly Canadian flavor."

He said no figures have been set as to a good proportion of Canadian and non-Canadian teachers at Uvic.

"I think an arbitrary limit would be silly — on the other hand, to ignore the problem would be silly.

•

"In the natural sciences there is not a problem, in the social sciences there is."

The social sciences include sociology, anthropology, psychology, geography, economics and political science. Since human behavior plays a major role in all of them a Canadian point-of-view is considered vital.

However, at Uvic, as at many other universities, an analysis of the 82 social scientists according to citizenship shows U.S. faculty members as the strongest national group.

The representation is: U.S., 41.5 per cent; Canadian, 39 per cent; U.K., 15.9 per cent; and other countries, 3.6 per cent.

When the university is broken down into its three faculties, the 59-member education faculty

American Influence On Campus Growing

Analysing the international makeup of the University of Victoria faculty in two different ways turns up some surprising disparities as well as some interesting trends.

Trevor Matthews, economist and Uvic presidential assistant, classified faculty first on the basis of place-of-birth and then according to citizenship.

The following table, based on place-of-birth figures, shows one version of the pattern of changing national representation from 1960 to this year.

	Canada	U.K.	U.S.	Other	Total
1960-61	73.5%	17%	2.5%	7%	75
1964-65	44	27	18.5	10.5	205
1968-69	33.5	27	25	14.5	339
1969-70	33.5	26.5	27.3	12.7	385

According to the place-of-birth statistics only one-third of this year's faculty is Canadian, while just over half is made up of Britishers and Americans.

But a breakdown of faculty according to citizenship shows that 44.2 per cent are Canadian,

Ottawa To Open Docks?

VANCOUVER—Word on possible next moves by Ottawa was being awaited here early this afternoon by longshoremen and maritime employers following the second turn-down by union members of contract proposals.

The Vancouver Sun said the labor minister today gave strike-bound west coast ports an ultimatum to settle their dispute within 48 hours or face federal legislation forcing them to work. There has been no confirmation of this report.

Shortly after results of the vote by the 3,200 dockworkers was made public last night, Labor Minister Bryce Mackasey said in Ottawa he was "disappointed."

Mackasey, who was in Vancouver last week to guide renewed talks between union and employers, said then that if a settlement was not reached soon he would be forced to use legislation to get the ships loaded.

Andy Kotowich, Canadian-area president of the ILWU, announced the results of the vote Tuesday night but siad he would have no further comment until after an executive board meeting called for this afternoon to discuss further policy.

E. M. Strang, president of the employers association, was not available for comment Tuesday night and he made no public statement this morning.

MAJORITY SAYS NO

Ninety-two per cent of union members voted on the newest proposals with 58 per cent of them against acceptance.

Earlier company proposals, approved by union negotiators, were rejected by 70 per cent of the membership two weeks ago. The dockworkers agreed then that a wage increase of 85 cents an hour, in a 27-month contract was satisfactory. Pre-strike base rate was $3.88 an hour.

Federal mediator William P. Kelly, who had been working with both parties to reach a settlement, said Tuesday night if the dockers expect a legislative settlement "they will have nothing to gain."

Mr. Kelly said there will be no further mediation attempts by the federal government.

"I think the union executive and membership will have to do some soul searching and see what their own difficulty is. The membership has repudiated their negotiators who, I think, had done a pretty good job on their behalf."

MONTREAL DOCKERS WALK OUT

MONTREAL (CP) — About 2,000 Montreal longshoremen walked off their jobs today for a four-hour "study session" involving a merger of all longshoring unions on the docks.

The walkout, which affected some shipping, had been planned and agreed to by the shipping companies, a spokesman for the Shipping Federation of Canada said.

Nearly 1,500 longshoremen, members of the Local 375, International Longshoremen's Association, turned up for the study sessions at an east-end arena. They were to be back to work for this afternoon's shift.

Abstaining On China

OTTAWA (CP)—Canada plans to abstain again this year on the question of mainland China's admission to the United Nations, it was learned today.

The vote on Albania's resolution calling for the admission of Peking and the expulsion of Nationalist China is expected to be taken by the UN General Assembly in New York this Friday.

So far the government has carefully refrained from saying officially which way the Canadian delegation intends to vote on the issue.

External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp has repeatedly stated that Canada's position will be consistent with the status of negotiations in Stockholm on Canadian recognition of Peking China.

Talks between Canadian and Chinese diplomats in the Swedish capital, aimed at establishment of diplomatic relations between Ottawa and Peking, have been under way for more than eight months.

The decision to abstain on the UN vote could be taken as an indication that no early agreement is anticipated in the Stockholm talks.

Mass March Ban Ordered

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government has rejected a permit for a mass march from the Capitol to the White House, November 15, to culminate what is being billed as the largest anti-war protest in history.

Only "a small symbolic parade" will be allowed, the justice department announced Tuesday night, citing "reliable reports" some demonstrators plan to "foment violence or to stage confrontations".

A department spokesman claimed "co-ordinated and effective law enforcement would be impossible" if "any serious violence" should erupt along the Pennsylvania Avenue route.

Immediately, the New Mobilization Committee, sponsor of the anti-Vietnam protests planned for Nov. 13-15, denied the charge and accused department officials of negotiating in bad faith.

"We vehemently deny," the committee said, "that any New Mobilization groups is planning activities . . . which are not legal and non-violent."

Some demonstration leaders earlier had forecast as many as 500,000 persons would take part in the massive protest.

TALKS POSTPONED

Two weeks of negotiations between the government and New Mobilization representatives broke off Monday because of a stalemate over the planned mass march finale.

But Ron Young, co-director of the project, suggested the department's refusal to allow a mass demonstration is a "delaying tactic" designed to make it "much more difficult for us to do all the necessary planning and co-ordination for the event."

"We are convinced," he said, "that we will be granted permits because we have the constitutional right to assemble and march on Nov. 15."

While rebuffing plans for the mass march, the government offered to permit a 40-hour "march against death," scheduled to start late Nov. 13 and end just before the major protest. That plan calls for 50,000 persons to march in files of twos from Arlington National Cemetery, down Pennsylvania Avenue in front of the White House and then to the Capitol grounds.

Also in Washington, the Senate foreign relations committee unexpectedly put off a decision today on whether to conduct public hearings on the Vietnam war.

Instead, Chairman J. W. Fulbright (Dem. Ark.) said, the committee agreed unanimously to ask State Secretary William P. Rogers and Defence Secretary Melvin R. Laird to testify during the week of Nov. 17 in closed session.

"Then we'll decide what to do subsequent to that," Fulbright told reporters.

The closed-door hearing planned with Rogers and Laird would come after the scheduled march on Washington by anti-war demonstrators.

But the chief reason for the timing, Fulbright said, was the fact that an inqury has been set for next week into the situation in Thailand, not the forthcoming anti-war demonstrations.

CLAIMING his victory "is a message from the people of New York they want the war in Vietnam to end," Mayor John Lindsay and his wife, Mary, are all smiles as he gets news of his re-election. (AP Wirephoto.)

'Show' States Go Republican

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Republicans have captured showpiece state elections with a Virginia upset and a new Jersey Landslide, while New York Mayor John V. Lindsay fashioned a personal triumph and became his party's ranking free-lance politician.

President Nixon, who intervened as a campaigner, shared in the victories Tuesday which made a Republican the governor of Virginia for the first time in nearly 25 years and won the New Jersey state house after 16 years of Democratic rule.

Lindsay, a Republican but not a Republican nominee, won his three-way race with a plurality of more than 150,000 votes—a margin greater than he built four years ago to win his first term.

The victory gave new lustre to his credentials as a man with a potential future in national politics.

Cleveland Mayor Carl B. Stokes, a Negro, won over Republican Ralph J. Perk, who challenged his crime-fighting record, by about 2,000 votes.

A Democrat claimed victory in a New Jersey U.S. congressional election, but a recount loomed there.

Republican Linwood Holton captured the Virginia statehouse in the major upset of the elections, defeating Democrat William C. Battle by more than 50,000 votes.

WINS NEW JERSEY

Representative William T. Cahill, a six-term congressman, topped former Democratic Gov. Robert B. Meyner by 500,000 votes to win election as governor of New Jersey.

That victory delivered to the Republicans the last of the northern industrial states still governed by a Democrat, two-term incumbent Richard J. Hughes, who was ineligible for another term.

And the two victories gave the Republicans 32 governorships and left the Democrats with 18.

"One thing is evident in the two races," said Representative Rogers C. B. Morton of Maryland, the Republican national chairman.

'RESULTS BACK NIXON'

"In New Jersey, the Democrat made an issue out of the president's position in Vietnam and lost, and in Virginia the Republican made it an issue by backing the president and won."

Morton said that signalled a voter endorsement of the policy Nixon described in an election-eve report.

But Lindsay called his re-election as a Liberal-Independent "a message that the people of New York City want the war to end."

Lindsay defeated Democrat Mario A. Procaccino, the city comptroller, and John J. Marchi, the conservative who five months ago beat out Lindsay for the Republican nomination for mayor.

Education TV Delayed

OTTAWA (CP) — State Secretary Gerard Pelletier told the Commons today the government has decided not to pursue the development of a Canadian educational broadcasting agency "for the time being."

Boards Sworn to Secrecy After 'Defeated' Funds Allowed

By BOB MITCHELL

Seven B.C. school boards whose operating budgets were rejected last year in referendums were allowed by the government — "after they were sworn to secrecy" — to obtain extra funds through a form of deficit financing.

James Campbell, president of the B.C. School Trustees' Association, said Tuesday that when a surplus operating budget was defeated at the polls by ratepayers, the following arrangements were made:

The amount in excess of the 110 per cent of the previous year's budget — to which boards are entitled under the government's school finance formula — was taken off the budget and a loan made for that amount.

The loan was to be repaid simply by including it, plus interest, in the municipal budget of the district concerned this year.

"I'd like to be called a liar on this," Campbell said during an interview at the Empress Hotel.

"The school boards in the seven districts where the referendum failed have been sworn to secrecy that they must not tell of the arrangements that transpired after the defeat of the referendum."

Under the school financing formula, introduced in 1968, school boards are permitted a 10 per cent increase each year over their previous year's budget.

Any further increase must come out of municipal revenue and is subject to approval by either the municipal council or ratepayers in a referendum. The board may also appeal to the cabinet as a last resort.

Campbell led members of the BCSTA executive to Victoria to present the group's annual brief to Education Minister Donald Brothers. The two-hour meeting was attended by several senior department of education officials, including deputy minister Dr. Neil Perry and superintendent Frank Levirs.

Campbell said the department gave no indication it is dissatisfied with the referendum principle. Nor did he indicate what new legislation he plans for the 1970 session

'Duplication to End'

The president of the Union of B.C. Municipalities expressed approval today for the reported "green light" by Education Minister Donald Brothers for joint construction and operation of community facilities.

"If the minister has in fact given this proposal his blessing, a great deal of dulpication of services can perhaps be eliminated," said UBCM president, Mayor Hugh Curtis of Saanich.

"This is all to the good at any time but especially in these days when money is difficult to find for public purposes."

The B.C. Schools Trustees' Association has also supported the proposal and a delegation which met Brothers Tuesday said the minister agreed on such joint school-community projects as swimming pools, gymnasiums and other recreational and educational facilities.

A strong UBCM delegation supported by regional district officials and members of the Municipal Officers' Association is meeting with Municipal Affiars Minister Dan Campbell about his proposed capital borrowing authority for local government.

Halloween Prank Victim Dies

* * * * * *

Police Examining Every Clue to Find Culprit

By ED GOULD

Myron Walter Parenuik, 25, of Youbou died in Royal Jubilee Hospital Tuesday and RCMP today redoubled their efforts to find the person who felled the tree that led to his death.

Parenuik suffered massive head and body injuries when his car ran into the tree on Halloween night on a foggy stretch of Highway 10 miles east of Lake Cowichan.

The car hit the tree at the driver's eye level "making a convertible out of the car and nearly decapitating the driver."

●

Cpl. Scott Coxen, head of Lake Cowichan RCMP detachment, said a thorough scientific investigation is under way to find the person or persons involved.

He said today the wedge of wood and sawdust cut out of the tree are being compared with similar material that shows up in pant cuffs, shoe seams and the floors of cars belonging to suspects.

●

Several "automatic checks on those capable of it" have been carried out without success but others at work in the woods will be interrogated when they return home at the weekend, Coxen said.

He said the methods the detachment is using in checking the tree material, saw marks, foot prints and tire tread marks is similar to those in tracing guns and cars involved in hit-and-run accidents.

"Except in this case we have a hell of a lot less to go on in comparing the known with the unknown."

The same saw was used to cut another tree which was lying across the road farther back towards Lake Cowichan. Removing it and investigating an unrelated accident delayed police in getting to Parenuik.

Tire marks found there were also identical making it possible for police to put together at least a "possible description" of the prankster's car.

"The tires were five-ribbed, summer tread on possibly a late-model smaller car," Coxen said.

The supposition that it was a smaller car was based on the fact the tread was light "but this may have been because of the extreme springiness of the wet soil."

●

Coxen said calls "mostly from cranks but some honest" began to come into headquarters following appeals for information that might relate to the case.

Most callers refuse to leave names.

"But one man even named a Lake Cowichan resident he suspected did the job. We checked him out and are convinced that he was not involved in any way."

The break Coxen is looking for is based on more than one person being involved.

●

"One of the parties, one who may not have actually used the saw himself, may feel pangs of conscience after reading that the victim of the practical joke is now dead. I hope he phones or comes in. It's our best chance."

The fact that the trees were fallen in an expert manner, a wedge cut out of the front and a single cut at the back so that they would fall across the highway as planned, did not necessarily indicate that a professional logger did the cutting.

"Anyone from 11 years old on who lives in a community like this soon learns to use a powersaw," Coxen said.

Construction Pace Intense Everywhere

Construction activity on southern Vancouver Island this year is almost double last year.

Building permits issued by the seven municipalities in the first 10 months of 1969 total $67 millions compared with $45.4 millions in the same period last year.

Leading the way is Victoria city, with permits worth $30 million, an increase of just over $8 million from last year. Apartments are responsible for almost half this figure.

Saanich was second with $19.7 million worth of building permits issued, up from the $13.8 million last year.

But residential construction was down. Permits have been issued for 346 houses and duplexes this year worth $7.4 million compared with 412 worth $8.1 million last year.

Oak Bay, boosted by apartment construction, registered $6.3 million, up from $2.3 million last year.

Other figures (last year's corresponding period in brackets): Sidney $3.1 million ($2.7 million); Central Saanich $2.7 million ($1.9 million); Esquimalt $2.5 million ($1.6 million); and North Saanich $1.7 million ($1 million).

Figures from Langford-Colwood-Metchosin were not available.

HOUSING CONFLICT

Prices Down And Sales Up

By AB KENT

While average Victoria prices have dropped, multiple listing real estate sales in the last quarter have risen, suggesting a conflict within the industry.

But according to local real estate men the explanation is simple. Average house prices have fallen, partly following a national trend caused by tight money and high interest rates on mortgages.

The result is that more houses for sale are placed on multiple listing to improve the chances of selling them in a tighter market; hence the greater multiple listing total for both the three months ending Oct. 31 and in the 12 months going back to November 1968.

Victoria Real Estate Board president P. G. Jackson said a seasonal decline could be expected about this time, which might be another explanation for the drop in unit average price.

He also drew attention to the fact that a greater improvement in average prices was registered by Victoria in the first quarter, compared with other cities in Camada.

"We shot up higher than the others in the spring, so we've come down a bit sharper in the fall," Jackson said.

Average Price of $21,438

Figures published by the Canadian Association of Real Estate Boards show the average price of a Victoria home sold in the third quarter this year was $21,438, a decline of $1,894 from the second quarter, but still $3,815 higher than at the end of last year.

By comparison, Toronto prices were off $1,000 between the last two quarters but the latest average is $2,000 better than at the end of 1968.

"The trend to lower prices seems to be more prevlaent in eastern Canada and in the smaller cities," said CAREB research director Blair Jackson. On a national basis, the average decline from second quarter prices is $400, or 2 per cent.

He compared a 26 per cent dollar increase in multiple listing sales for the mid-year report, with 7 per cent growth in the third quarter.

Average growth in recent years has been 25 per cent, and for the first nine months of 1969 the rate is 21 per cent.

In Victoria last month there were 130 multiple listing sales, four more than in the same month last year, with a total value of $3.39 million.

Total value in October 1968 was $2.6 million, bringing the 12 months to $32.87 million, or $6.27 million less than the $39.15 million in the 12 months from November 1968 to the end of last month.

Ask The Times

Q. How many union members are their in Canada? Can you these are international? What are the five largest unions? — P.D.

A. The federal department of labor lists union members at 2,074,000 as of January, 1969, an increase of 64,000 during 1968. There are 101 international unions, 59 national unions, 196 directly chartered locals (152 with CLC; 44 with CNTU) and 124 independent local organizations. The five largest unions are United Steelworkers of America, 150,000 members; Canadian Union of Public Employees, 124,500; International Union, United Automobile, Aerospace and Agricultural Implement Workers of America, 113,000; Public Service Alliance of Canada (CLC), 96,200; United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, 73,500.

$90 STOLEN IN BREAK-IN

About $90 was taken from a cash box in an overnight break-in at Canfor Ltd., 790 Topaz.

City police said a warehouse door was forced to gain entry.

Ray Forsha, 750 Pemberton, told city police Tuesday a gold and diamond ring worth $800 and a $100 pearl tie pin were stolen from his unlocked room Saturday night.

High Winds And Rains Weathered

Victoria has weathered the high winds and heavy rains of Tuesday with minimal damage and inconvenience.

The southeasterly winds of Tuesday that gusted to 50 miles per hour from a 30 mile per hour average are expected to shift to the northwest this afternoon and only gust to 30, a weather office spokesman said.

Spokesmen for B.C. Hydro and Power Authority and B.C. Telephone Co. said little or no problems were experienced in servicing.

A Victoria Parks spokesman said there was "no problem at all" as a result of weather disturbance.

HMS Argonaut tilts with wind as she warps in

A FUNNY THING HAPPENED ON WAY TO THE ADMIRAL

Whoops!

Even before Sir Francis Drake nonchalantly finished his game of bowls on Plymouth Hoe and set out to give the Spanish Armada the beating of its life, the Royal Navy has prized punctuality almost as much as the daily tot of "Nelson's Blood."

A proud tradition was today thrown to the winds—or thrown by the wind—when the anti-submarine frigate HMS Argonaut entered Esquimalt Harbor for an eight-day visit.

Anyone with a dram of seawater in their veins knows it to be an unpardonable sin to enter harbor before your ETA (estimated time of arrival).

* * *

No one knows this better than the British.

Wednesday's arrival was scheduled to have the Argonaut steaming by Duntze Head at 0900 with Rear-Admiral H. A. Porter at the ready there to take the ceremonial salute from the visitor.

It didn't happen.

After steaming around at Royal Roads in a delaying manoeuvre, Argonaut set off full bore for the harbor, rounding Duntze Head six minutes ahead of schedule.

The admiral didn't make it.

* * *

As a naval spokesman explained, "The admiral had just left the administration building when we looked out to see Argonaut gunning it down the harbor."

He also said that the wind, which was blowing about 30 to 40 knots at the time, might have caused the unpardonable sin.

Argonaut's landing, too, was not quite in the Nelson tradition.

Strong gusts swept her as she tried to make a port landing, heeling over the ship of the line, her narrow beam and tall superstructure giving her the flexibility of a sloop.

Finally, with the assist from three tugs, she made it.

Which all proves that when there's a wind there's often a whether.

950 Layoffs Possible At BCFP Mills

Prospect of another 950 sawmill workers being thrown out of work at B.C. Forest Products, Ltd., Vancouver Island plants grew large today unless Ottawa intervenes to end the 5½-weeks-old longshore strike.

Two sawmills in Victoria, employing 550 men, and one at Lake Cowichan with 400 men are operating on a day-to-day basis, B.C. Forest Products said.

A full assessment of the situation was to be made later today by company management in Vancouver.

To date, according to a survey by the Council of Forest Industries, 5,000 sawmill workers on the B.C. coast are unemployed because there is no export lumber being loaded and inventory space is virtually depleted while dockers maintain their strike in the principal ports.

LOG DEFICIENCY

Within a week, the figure will be 10,000, said CFI, correcting an earlier estimate that said 10,000 could be jobless by the end of last week.

An insignificant number of loggers have been laid off woods operations due to the surplus lumber situation. Many of the loggers still working are building up a log inventory deficiency that developed during the summer.

"Depending on what happens in Ottawa, the crunch will come this week," a CFI spokesman said.

Gordon Draeske, CFI president, is in Ottawa on a regular visit to policymakers and will make a point of seeking assurances from government spokesman to keep the forest industry going.

'SECOND LOOK'

The CFI said in Vancouver that "every mill still operating is going to have to take a second look." Those that have shut down, including five of the largest, will not be opening, he said.

MacMillan Bloedel Ltd. was the first major company to close its sawmills, but several smaller ones have been shut for several weeks. Sooke Forest Products was the first to close, reopened when settlement of the strike seemed imminent and is operating now.

Mine-mill operations in the interior also are being squeezed since most rely on export shipments for revenue.

Arthur Mayse . . .

IN THE MAIL THE other morning, the handsomest envelope ever to come my way. Most of its front was given over to a woods scene done in the classic outdoors tradition.

It shows a canoe drawn up on a lake shore, a lone woodsman cooking his supper, and against a rank of birch trees, an explorer-type tent with front open to catch the fireglow.

A tangle of gaunt roots occupies the foreground. Evergreens rise in the background, and the postal stamp contributes a full moon.

★

The thing about this scene is that it was painted in water colors by a quietly busy Victoria artist. His name is Howard N. Davis. With talented wife, Esme, he lives at 4578 Hughes Road.

The note inside dealt with other matters, but before she ended it, Mrs. Davis explained that decorating envelopes is her husband's hobby.

He began it early in the last war, and since then has enriched several thousand envelopes with paintings or pen-and-ink sketches, no two of them alike.

★

In 1965, Howard Davis retired from provincial government service as an artist for the surveys and mapping branch.

Along with much other good work, he left behind him a unique land-form map of B.C. You'll find it on a second floor wall of the new provincial museum. Many hands had a part in preparing the floor-to-ceiling project, but it was Hughes who evolved it with the help of 180,000 air photographs.

Back now to those eye-pleasing envelopes. I suggested to Esme Davis, whose own scripts and illuminations are a fair sight to see, that a man so gifted could make his hobby pay. Davis could, and has received flattering offers only to decline them.

His envelopes are not for sale, a circumstance that adds stature to the gift.

GOOD-SPORT VICtorians who decided that Mrs. Lorna Vinden should go with a Canadian Wheelchair Sports Association team to Pan-American games in South America have guaranteed her trip.

★

A Canadian Paraplegic Association fund, into which dimes, quarters and dollars have been tumbling since I aired Mrs. Vinden's plight, has now climbed well over the $1,100-mark.

Lorna Vinden, as happy as she is excited, has booked her passage to Buenos Aires. She will leave Victoria by CPA on Nov. 25. Her racing wheelchair goes with her, and if hard trying can accomplish it, she'll bring another batch of medals home.

★

Significantly, many of the letters she's received have come from other handicapped men and women to whom her accomplishments as wage-earner and athlete have given courage.

To her, good luck.

From her, to Victorians and also to a scad of Vancouverites, much thanks!

ANY NUMBER OF TIMES, I've heard from disappointed young job-seekers who ran into an education block. They hadn't put in enough school time to qualify in a job-mart that gets tougher by the minute.

But one girl in our town has come up against a reverse situation. Wherever she applies for work, she's told that she has too much education.

That unlikely possibility never occurred to her when she graduated from Uvic last spring as a Bachelor of Science. A microbiologist who had majored in botany, she hoped to land a spot with one or other federal department in Victoria, where her husband is working toward his own degree.

But that was before Prime Minister Trudeau launched his government economy program. A berth of the sort she sought failed to materialize.

★

She then began looking for any job that might be going. Invariably, when she did succeed in tracking down an opening, she was told that a girl with a BSc. was far too well educated for such work.

Now, with not a thing in sight, she urges local industry, commerce and what-not to forget about her degree and please come up with just a plain, honest job, period.

All of which increases my conviction that it's a funny world . . . though not always funny-ha-ha.

No Birth Control Pills Thank You—Just $2

Two bucks. That will do it.

If everybody kicks in $2, the United Appeal can make it over the line. The line is $694,000 and today the collected total is just over $500,000.

Besides that, Appeal officials want to get poor old Earl Levy down from his windy perch in the clock tower at the Mayfair Shopping Centre.

He has to come down Saturday because the Mayfair people want to put up their Christmas decorations, but "I don't want to come down a loser," he said this morning.

So the Appeal is asking everybody who hasn't yet given to send $2 to the headquarters, 1917 Cook. And they're asking everybody who has given to see if they can't find an extra $2.

While Levy has been weathering his vigil, a former Victorian now living in San Rafael, Calif., has been looking out for him. Today he received a parcel in the mail from Carol Borgens. It contained, among other things, a banana, some dog bones, incense, lifesavers, bandaids and birth control pills. Birth control pills?

They Won't Be Penned Up in Reserves They Will Not Give Up Their Land

Times staff writer John Mika took 3½ hours to fly in "a great aluminum thunderbird" from Victoria into the heart of the Nass River valley, the homeland of the Nishga people. But it took him a slow and painful 23 hours to return as weather mocked "our technological myths." To Mika, that was symbolic of the impressions he received between the two contrasting journeys. And his main impression? A new Quebec is emerging from the B.C. wilderness.

By JOHN MIKA

Einstein learned that time and distance are relative things even though he never visited Kincolith.

But he was brilliant.

I had to go there last week to learn it the hard way during a trip that began as a quick and easy journey into the mythical past and ended as a slow and painful progress into the real future of our country.

Much more important, Indian Affairs Minister Jean Chretien learned something there, too.

Just as Quebec's Canadiennes transformed the nation in the past several years by asserting themselves after two centuries of lassitude, and not exactly according to a sympathetic royal commission's masterplan preparation in the carpeted offices of the nation's far-away capital where it is discreet to softly tiptoe around rough realities.

•

Instead, jolted by the defiantly proud cry he heard in the B.C. wilderness, he uttered an instinctively human and apolitical cheer.

"I wish you success," he said of their endeavor to refute the white bureaucracy's claim to arbitrary title over their valley.

Thus the 12th annual Nishga Tribal Council convention was held there this year, instead of in one of the other three Nass Valley communities, to help celebrate the opening of a 120 by 60-foot post-and-beam structure using all the laminated spans, decorative plywood, aluminum sash, fancy toilet rooms and fluorescent lighting so familiar here.

The long house gives way to the community hall, the potlach to a roast beef banquet prepared and served by the womenfolk, the ceremonial chanting to a brass band concert, the orations of hereditary chiefs to political speeches by band councillors, the watchful warriors to volunteer police, the guests' ritual gifts of copper to cheques for the tibal council's annual budget.

The ever-changing forms are only adaptations by a people who are constantly and consciously themselves, doing their own thing in their own time.

"This is where the land question really began and it is here where it will have to be settled," said Atlin MLA Frank Calder, president of the Nishga Tribal Council, in his speech.

•

He was referring to a century-old event: when the first surveyors came through to plot the boundaries of the proposed Nishga reserves they were met by gunfire.

"We not only oppose the confinement which is known as the reserve system today, we opposed it then, right from the start."

For that reason, there should be no surprise that the 12th annual convention had decided to give approval in principle to Chretien's new Indian policy proposal, he said.

"We voted 45 to 1 with four abstentions, in favor of the principle of your policy so you could say we are 95 per cent in support but that doesn't mean we will agree with all the details and we will want to say that they shall be.

"But, Mr. Minister, you keep going. We don't want you to stop despite all the criticism you are receiving coast to coast.

•

"We believe that criticism against it is made by individual leaders without the consent of the Indian organizations but I predict that before this is over, the population of the Nishga nation is going to be perhaps the only one in all Canada that supports your policy."

Calder shifted back to the land question, pointing out that three-quarters of the tribal conuncil's $17,000 budget for 1969 was spent on the suit it launched against the provincial government for title to some 1,000 square miles of the inlets adjoining the Nass River mouth.

That suit ended Oct. 20 in a judgment by Mr. Justice J. G. Gould rejecting their claim but concluding with a rare use of "judicial liberty" to suggest that the government finance any appeal proceedings that might be launched by the Nishga tribal council.

•

"We do not want grants for this," said Calder. "We will do it with our own money."

In fact, he added, the Nishga council would rather not share in a federal $46,000 grant for re-organizing Indian associations across the province because it did not wish to be charged with hyprocisy.

"We fear to accept any money from governments because any moey we get now is being earmarked for fighting the land settlement case and we do not want to be accused of biting the hand that feeds us," he said.

•

"Mr. Minister, we know that we are going to be struggling for a long time yet and we might not win this case in the end becuase this valley is one of the most valuable pieces of real estate in the world and the people who control it today don't want to relinquish it.

"But we have committed ourselves to go to the highest courts in tle land and even outside if we have to — to the United Nations or the International Court at The Hague.

"We are committed to go all the way, though we know we have a fight on our hands and it will take many years, because it's not just for this generation.

•

"The torch was thrown to us by the past generations. We are carrying the torch now and we will throw it to the next generation. There is no stopping this fight."

He said the Oct. 20 judgment would be appealed and the tribal council did not want to see the federal government intervening by referring the dispute to an Indian claims commission or another body.

William McKay, Greenville band councillor, set the tone earlier:

"Today, we are faced with many great problems," he said with slow solemnity.

"We hope this (proposed Indian) policy does not mean assimilation. That is the great fear we have.

"In this year of 1969 we have for the first time asked the courts whether our people own the land.

(Although the Nishga land question is the oldest dispute of its kind in the province and has been the subject of petitions to the Imperial Privy Council in London, a study by a federal-provincial royal commission from 1913 to 1916 and two special joint Senate-Commons committee hearings in 1926 and 1961, Justice Gould was the first judge to try the case.)

•

"We lost the first argument but this is not defeat," said McKay.

"It's like baseball. The first batter has struck out. There are two more to go — and it's only the first inning."

Chretien, who still says he has not yet fully grasped the English language he began learning after entry into federal politics six years ago, exhibited deep emotion in gestures and expression as he struggled for words to match the eloquence of the Indians.

"I am very much impressed by what you have said here today — that you are a proud people, that you have a good case and that you are going to fight," the minister said.

•

"That is a great step. To do that you have to have guts.

"That is the proper way of doing it and it is a sign of something new emerging among the Indians of Canada —to realize and be proud of your identity as Indians."

He thanked the council for its support of his policy but added that a more thoughtful appraisal now is evident in the wake of initial country-wide condemnation by Indian spokesman of his proposed policy.

"Your children will have to compete with my children if they want to take their place in Canada," he said.

"If they want to live in the old way, they can do that because it is a free country. But they will have to choose one way or the other."

He said choosing the principle behind his policy would help preserve Indian culture.

"This is not the melting-pot," Chretien cried. "The word assimilation does not exist in the Canadian vocabulary.

"What we want is to share our life and responsibilities as Canadians and to be proud of our differences too.

"That is the virture of Canada — to be different and at the same time to be united.

•

"I too come from a minority and my English is not so good. Two hundred years ago there were only 30,000 to 50,000 French in this country and now we are seven million.

"I am proud of my people in Quebec but I am proud to be a Canadian too, like you.

"A culture is not learned in the head but is felt in the belly.

"Today there are 250,000 Indians in Canada who get more and more education every day and yet are controlled by legislation which says you have to have my permission in 115 sections out of 130 in the (Indian Affairs) Act.

"That is wrong.

"I find here a spirit that pleases me. This building pleases me. It is a symbol of what the Indian can do for himself. It is a magnificent hall."

Chretien said he would not comment directly on the land case other than to say he had heard and understood Calder's plea that the federal government not interfere by referring it to a commission.

"I congratulate you on the way you have decided to go and I respect it," he said.

The most poignant moment of Chretien's visit had arrived.

•

Unlike the militant, middle-aged councillors who harangued the audience with spirit, a greying James Gosnell, hereditary chief of Aiyansh village and vice-president of the Nishga tribal council, spoke softly.

His shoulders seemed bowed under the disappointments accumulated over many years and rather than carrying any torch he appeared to have passed his on — yet there was still a searing ember in his eyes as he presented a desk pen set to Chretien on behalf of the assembly.

"For many years our people have been neglected," Gosnell said gently to the audience.

"But we feel that it has reached its lowest ebb and now the tide has turned for our people. We hope so.

"This is a very historic banquet in the story of our people — that the Honorable Sir decided to honor us by being present in this convention with us."

Turning to the now-standing minister, Gosnell continued in halting English:

"This pen will be a silent witness to the history you will write.

"It will be a silent witness of tomorrow for our people.

"Our children, that are yet unborn, will read of whatever it will write."

•

Chretien gripped Gosnell's hand and pumped it hard. He faced the audience for a moment as though about to reply, then sat down silently staring into his plate.

There were other speeches, many of them, in the Indian style of spinning out the fleeting hours of communal pleasures. The next day Chretien cut the ribbon opening the community hall but couldn't stay for the lunch of turkey and ham cooked by dozens of Kincolith women.

He departed in a Coast Guard helicopter at the last possible moment to make connections for members of his party boarding aircraft at Prince Rupert, rushing out of the helicopter twice to pat heads in the excited circle of children beyond the whirring blades and to give a final handshake to his personal host, Tony Robinson, chief councillor of Kincolith.

•

Schmaltzy? Undoubtedly. The entire convention and Chretien's visit were staged productions but the message of Kincolith is worth dramatization simply because it was unsophisticated.

My journey from Victoria to Kincolith took 2¾ hours elapsed flight time in three aircraft, and from the superiority of 23,000 feet I composed the glib comparisons of a great aluminium thunderbird flashing like an arrow into the legendary past of a primitive people.

But the ageless weather mocked our technological myths on the return trip and it took a wearying 23 hours to get home. It's pretty hard to feel superior jouncing in the back of a diesel bus from one foggy airport to another or staring with frustration at terminal walls.

The irreconcilable physics of my trips to Kincolith and back seem to symbolize Einstein's theory of the relativity of time and distance.

•

And, even if only for micro-seconds, the several fusions of feeling when the federal politician from Quebec collided with the provincial politician from the Nass River at a banquet table in the midst of the wilderness triggered some awesome eruptions of Canadianism.

You could almost say that the Canadian corollory of that most potent formula reads: Emotion equals MC squared.

'We're going to be struggling for a long time yet'—Calder either, the next revolution of Canada's character already is swinging near as the Indians also seek a just place in their own way, and not precisely following the path of a trail blazing "white paper".

In polite but vehement speeches, the leaders of the "Nishga nation", a tribe of about 1,000 tough souls who inhabit the broad Nass River valley which winds northeastward roughly parallel to the curve of the nearby Alaska panhandle, told their trustee the times are changing even faster than he thought.

•

They emphasized over and over that their first priority was to establish ownership of all their hereditary land through the courts and not through Parliament in fact they warned the federal cabinet not to get between them and the law by setting up a commission or tribunal to mediate their dispute.

Symbolically important, the second priority was given to Chretien's own white paper proposal to turn over title of all designated reserves to Indians and eliminating his portfolio.

•

They said they agreed with this in principle, but in principle only, and the details would have to be hammered out with them and not with the departmental functionaries who are supposed to represent them in the bureaucratic scheme they wish to disavow.

Chretien demonstrated how hard the lesson hit home by throwing away the politician's speech he came to deliver, after so much careful preparation in the carpeted offices of the nation's far-away capital where it is discreet to softly tiptoe around rough realities.

Portland Canal, too, and the aboriginal Nishga people followed the Quebecois colonists back to the beginnings of Canadian destiny to write a new history.

For just as powerful as "maitre chez nous" is the Indian rallying cry for title to their land and all that it implies.

Its sound, from over the mountains and inlets, is beginning to penetrate through the cash register percussion of the gross product and, however faint now, it is sure to grow in volume during the next decade until it too changes the rhythm of our national life.

It's still very hard to hear the new tune through the roar of downtown traffic in Canada's cities.

•

But the song is loud and clear up at the intersection of the 55th parallel north and 130th meridian west where only two trucks ever disturb the peace of the Indian village at the confluence of the Nass and the Portland Canal.

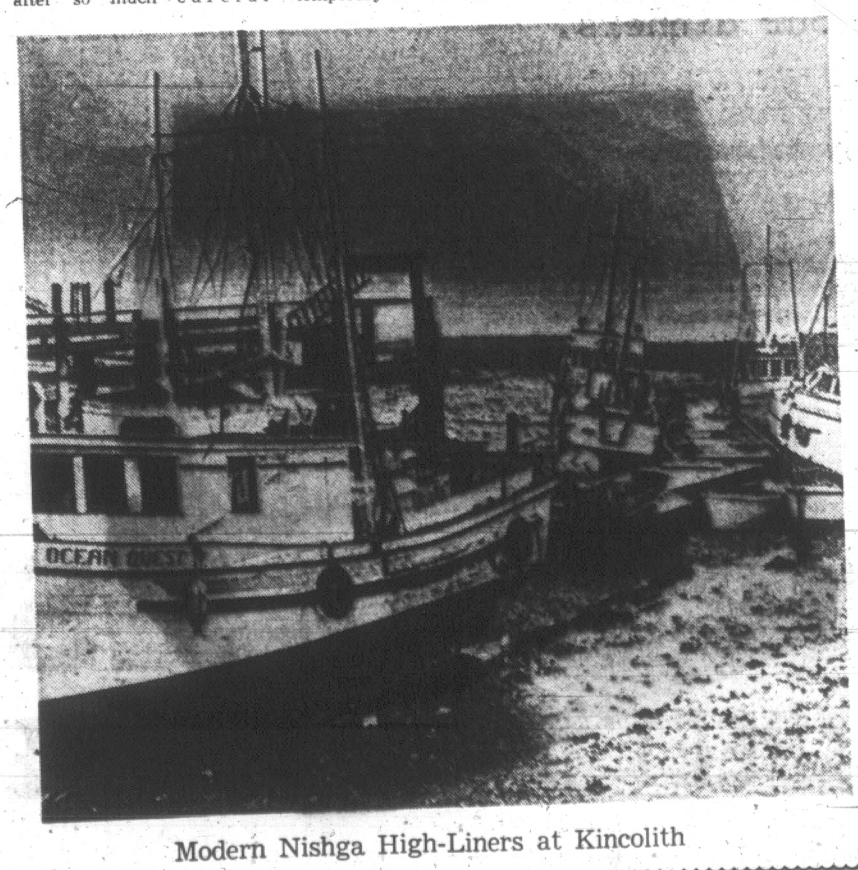
Although it boasts only a population of 350 living beyond the blacktop, television transmitters and telephone lines of Prince Rupert 70 miles to the south, Kincolith is not backward or rootless.

Its people chase salmon in modern, instrument-laden "high liner" fishing boats. Its maidens wear stylish mini-skirts and the common masculine headgear is the hard hat.

But the fjord-like backdrop of spruce and fir-green mountains with snowy peaks poking above mists swirling over tidal streams is a timeless setting for continuation of ancient traditions in contemporary dress.

'To do that you have to have guts'—Chretien

'Now the tide has turned for our people'—Gosnell



Modern Nishga High-Liners at Kincolith

Uvic Chief Orders Canada-First Hiring

By BOB MITCHELL

Department heads at the University of Victoria have been directed by the president, Dr. Bruce Partridge, to "pursue" Canadian students in graduate schools in Canada and abroad to fill open teaching positions.

The announcement of the drive to get more Canadian faculty members is coupled with a survey released Tuesday showing that less than half of Uvic's 385 faculty members are Canadian, and more than one-quarter are United States citizens.

Partridge said in an interview with the Times that he had met earlier this fall with department heads and deans and directed them to advertise all vacant teaching positions in academic publications across Canada.

•

He also urged them to make full use of Operation Retrieval, a project initiated by the federal government to attract Canadian students in foreign universities back to Canada upon completion of their advanced degrees.

Partridge described the faculty hiring situation on Canadian campuses as one of "Canadians versus non-Canadians."

"This university and all Canadian universities should have a distinctly Canadian flavor."

He said no figures have been set as to a good proportion of Canadian and non-Canadian teachers at Uvic.

"I think an arbitrary limit would be silly — on the other hand, to ignore the problem would be silly.

•

"In the natural sciences there is not a problem, in the social sciences there is."

The social sciences include sociology, anthropology, psychology, geography, economics and political science. Since human behavior plays a major role in all of them a Canadian point-of-view is considered vital.

However, at Uvic, as at many other universities, an analysis of the 82 social scientists according to citizenship shows U.S. faculty members as the strongest national group.

The representation is: U.S., 41.5 per cent; Canadian, 39 per cent; U.K., 15.9 per cent; and other countries, 3.6 per cent.

When the university is broken down into its three faculties, the 59-member education faculty

American Influence On Campus Growing

Analysing the international makeup of the University of Victoria faculty in two different ways turns up some surprising disparities as well as some interesting trends.

Trevor Matthews, economist and Uvic presidential assistant, classified faculty first on the basis of place-of-birth and then according to citizenship.

The following table, based on place-of-birth figures, shows one version of the pattern of changing national representation from 1960 to this year.

	Canada	U.K.	U.S.	Other	Total
1960-61	73.5%	17%	2.5%	7%	75
1964-65	44	27	18.5	10.5	205
1968-69	33.5	27	25	14.5	339
1969-70	33.5	26.5	27.3	12.7	385

According to the place-of-birth statistics only one-third of this year's faculty is Canadian, while just over half is made up of Britishers and Americans.

But a breakdown of faculty according to citizenship shows that 44.2 per cent are Canadian,

Ottawa To Open Docks?

(Times News Services)

OTTAWA—Labor Minister Bryce Mackasey told the Commons this afternoon that it was up to the cabinet as a whole to decide whether legislation should be brought down to force British Columbia dock strikers back to work.

The Vancouver Sun said it has learned Mackasey has given the strikers 48 hours to return to their jobs or face government action.

B.C.'s 3,200 dock workers Tuesday voted to reject the latest contract proposals worked out between their union representatives and the companies.

In the Commons, Mackasey refused to specify what actions he had in mind.

He said he was considering another trip to Vancouver this evening.

Andy Kotowich, Canadian-area president of the ILWU, announced the results of the vote Tuesday night but said he would have no further comment until after an executive board meeting called for this afternoon to discuss further policy.

E. M. Strang, president of the employers association, was not available for comment Tuesday night and he made no public statement this morning.

MAJORITY SAYS NO

Ninety-two per cent of union members voted on the newest proposals with 58 per cent of them against acceptance.

Believed to be the major stumbling block is the size of work gangs.

Earlier company proposals, approved by union negotiators, were rejected by 70 per cent of the membership two weeks ago. The dockworkers agreed then that a wage increase of 85 cents an hour, in a 27-month contract was satisfactory. Pre-strike base rate was $3.88 an hour.

Federal mediator William P. Kelly, who had been working with both parties to reach a settlement, said Tuesday night if the dockers expect a legislative settlement "they will have nothing to gain."

"I think the union executive and membership will have to do some soul searching and see what their own difficulty is. The membership has repudiated their negotiators who, I think, had done a pretty good job on their behalf."

BULLETIN

CPR Seeks Passenger Train End

OTTAWA (CP) — Canadian Pacific Railways, claiming a $19,550,900 loss on its Montreal-Toronto - Vancouver passenger service in 1968, has asked the Canadian Transport Commission for permission to end the run.

The application is one of 31 filed with the commission by both CP and Canadian National Railways, the commission said today.

If permission to discontinue uneconomic passenger train services is not granted, the railways are allowed to request a government subsidy of 80 per cent on their losses.

MONTREAL DOCKERS WALK OUT

MONTREAL (CP) — About 2,000 Montreal longshoremen walked off their jobs today for a four-hour "study session" involving a merger of all longshoring unions on the docks.

The walkout, which affected some shipping, had been planned and agreed to by the shipping companies, a spokesman for the Shipping Federation of Canada said.

Nearly 1,500 longshoremen, members of the Local 375, International Longshoremen's Association, turned up for the study sessions at an east-end arena. They were to be back to work for this afternoon's shift.

Education TV Delayed

OTTAWA (CP) — State Secretary Gerard Pelletier told the Commons today the government has decided not to pursue the development of a Canadian educational broadcasting agency "for the time being."

Mass March Ban Ordered

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government has rejected a permit for a mass march from the Capitol to the White House, November 15, to culminate what is being billed as the largest anti-war protest in history.

Only "a small symbolic parade" will be allowed, the justice department announced Tuesday night, citing "reliable reports" some demonstrators plan to "foment violence or to stage confrontations".

A department spokesman claimed "co-ordinated and effective law enforcement would be impossible" if "any serious violence" should erupt along the Pennsylvania Avenue route.

Immediately, the New Mobilization Committee, sponsor of the anti-Vietnam protests planned for Nov. 13-15, denied the charge and accused department officials of negotiating in bad faith.

"We vehemently deny," the committee said, "that any New Mobilization groups is planning activities . . . which are not legal and non-violent."

Some demonstration leaders earlier had forecast as many as 500,000 persons would take part in the massive protest.

TALKS POSTPONED

Two weeks of negotiations between the government and New Mobilization representatives broke off Monday because of a stalemate over the planned mass march finale.

But Ron Young, co-director of the project, suggested the department's refusal to allow a mass demonstration is a "delaying tactic" designed to make it "much more difficult for us to do all the necessary planning and coordination for the event."

"We are convinced," he said, "that we will be granted permits because we have the constitutional right to assemble and march on Nov. 15."

While rebuffing plans for the mass march, the government offered to permit a 40-hour "march against death," scheduled to start late Nov. 13 and end just before the major protest. That plan calls for 50,000 persons to march in files of twos from Arlington National Cemetery, down Pennsylvania Avenue in front of the White House and then to the Capitol grounds.

Also in Washington, the Senate foreign relations committee unexpectedly put off a decision today on whether to conduct public hearings on the Vietnam war.

Instead, Chairman J. W. Fulbright (Dem. Ark.) said, the committee agreed unanimously to ask State Secretary William P. Rogers and Defence Secretary Melvin R. Laird to testify during the week of Nov. 17 in closed session.

"Then we'll decide what to do subsequent to that," Fulbright told reporters.

The closed-door hearing planned with Rogers and Laird would come after the scheduled march on Washington by anti-war demonstrators.

But the chief reason for the timing, Fulbright said, was the fact that an inqury has been set for next week into the situation in Thailand, not the forthcoming anti-war demonstrations.

CLAIMING his victory "is a message from the people of New York they want the war in Vietnam to end," Mayor John Lindsay and his wife, Mary, are all smiles as he gets news of his re-election. (AP Wirephoto.)

'Show' States Go Republican

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Republicans have captured showpiece state elections with a Virginia upset and a New Jersey landslide, while New York Mayor John V. Lindsay fashioned a personal triumph and became his party's ranking free-lance politician.

President Nixon, who intervened as a campaigner, shared in the victories Tuesday which made a Republican the governor of Virginia for the first time in nearly 25 years and won the New Jersey state house after 16 years of Democratic rule.

Lindsay, a Republican but not a Republican nominee, won his three-way race with a plurality of more than 150,000 votes—a margin greater than he built four years ago to win his first term.

The victory gave new lustre to his credentials as a man with a potential future in national politics.

Cleveland Mayor Carl B. Stokes, a Negro, won over Republican Ralph J. Perk, who challenged his crime-fighting record, by about 2,000 votes.

A Democrat claimed victory in a New Jersey U.S. congressional election, but a recount loomed there.

Republican Linwood Holton captured the Virginia statehouse in the major upset of the elections, defeating Democrat William C. Battle by more than 50,000 votes.

WINS NEW JERSEY

Representative William T. Cahill, a six-term congressman, topped former Democratic Gov. Robert B. Meyner by 500,000 votes to win election as governor of New Jersey.

That victory delivered to the Republicans the last of the northern industrial states still governed by a Democrat, two-term incumbent Richard J. Hughes, who was ineligible for another term.

And the two victories gave the Republicans 32 governorships and left the Democrats with 18.

"One thing is evident in the two races," said Representative Rogers C. B. Morton of Maryland, the Republican national chairman.

'RESULTS BACK NIXON'

"In New Jersey, the Democrat made an issue out of the president's position in Vietnam and lost, and in Virginia the Republican made it an issue by backing the president and won."

Morton said that signalled a voter endorsement of the policy Nixon described in an election-eve report.

But Lindsay called his re-election as a Liberal-Independent "a message that the people of New York City want the war to end."

Lindsay defeated Democrat Mario A. Procaccino, the city comptroller, and John J. Marchi, the conservative who five months ago beat out Lindsay for the Republican nomination for mayor.

Boards Sworn to Secrecy After 'Defeated' Funds Allowed

By BOB MITCHELL

Seven B.C. school boards whose operating budgets were rejected last year in referendums were allowed by the government — "after they were sworn to secrecy" — to obtain extra funds through a form of deficit financing.

James Campbell, president of the B.C. School Trustees' Association, said Tuesday that when a surplus operating budget was defeated at the polls by ratepayers, the following arrangements were made:

The amount in excess of the 110 per cent of the previous year's budget — to which boards are entitled under the government's school finance formula — was taken off the budget and a loan made for that amount.

The loan was to be repaid simply by including it, plus interest, in the municipal budget of the district concerned this year.

"I'd like to be called a liar on this," Campbell said during an interview at the Empress Hotel.

"The school boards in the seven districts where the referendum failed have been sworn to secrecy that they must not tell of the arrangements that transpired after the defeat of the referendum."

Under the school financing formula, introduced in 1968, school boards are permitted a 10 per cent increase each year over their previous year's budget.

Any further increase must come out of municipal revenue and is subject to approval by either the municipal council or ratepayers in a referendum. The board may also appeal to the cabinet as a last resort.

Campbell led members of the BCSTA executive to Victoria to present the group's annual brief to Education Minister Donald Brothers. The two-hour meeting was attended by several senior department of education officials, including deputy minister Dr. Neil Perry and superintendent Frank Levirs.

Campbell said the department gave no indication it is dissatisfied with the referendum principle. Nor did he indicate what new legislation he plans for the 1970 session

'Duplication to End'

The president of the Union of B.C. Municipalities expressed approval today for the reported "green light" by Education Minister Donald Brothers for joint construction and operation of community facilities.

"If the minister has in fact given this proposal his blessing, a great deal of duplication of services can perhaps be eliminated," said UBCM president, Mayor Hugh Curtis of Saanich.

"This is all to the good at any time but especially in these days when money is difficult to find for public purposes."

The B.C. Schools Trustees' Association has also supported the proposal and a delegation which met Brothers Tuesday said the minister agreed on such joint school-community projects as swimming pools, gymnasiums and other recreational and educational facilities.

A strong UBCM delegation supported by regional district officials and members of the Municipal Officers' Association is meeting with Municipal Affairs Minister Dan Campbell about his proposed capital borrowing authority for local government.

Solidarity Forever Goes Up in Smoke!

Delegates Torpedo 'Bargaining Front'

By DENNIS BELL

VANCOUVER (CP) — Angry convention delegates Tuesday torpedoed a cornerstone of the British Columbia Federation of Labor's proposed "united bargaining front" after a stormy debate on administration.

"Solidarity forever" went up in smoke as 460 delegates to the BCFL's week-long convention threw out a report submitted by president Al Staley, secretary Ray Haynes and other officers.

The report included a review of the BCFL executive's handling of labor matters during the past year and outlined comprehensive plans for a future expansion of the federation's role in the collective bargaining process.

Staley was booed and heckled when he at first declared a motion to approve the report carried on a voice vote. He relented and the motion was defeated in a standing vote by a five-to-three margin.

Forces backing Paddy Neale, militant president of the Vancouver and District Labor Council, interpreted the vote as a major setback for Haynes, who is up for re-election in the key secretary's post.

●

Neale announced Monday he would challenge Haynes in Thursday's federation elections. So far, Neale has not put together a full slate to oppose the current officers, but some pro-Neale candidates were expected to be named later today.

In addition to handling of union matters, the current federation executive came under heavy fire for its failure to get the United Fishermen and Allied Workers' union back into the BCFL.

The UFAWU, with 7,200 members, has been trying to re-enter the parent Canadian Labor Congress and through it the federation for 12 years following suspension for alleged communist leadership.

Louis Kaufman, president of the Vancouver local of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, said the UFAWU controversy and other matters during the past year have damaged the image of the federation among rank-and-file workers.

"The role of the federation should be to coordinate and not to dictate," said Kaufman. "We've developed into a monstrous bureaucractic structure."

The federation's proposals for a "united bargaining front" of unions representing more than 100,000 workers whose contracts come up for negotiation next spring were also sharply attacked.

"We're all for a strong central labor body, but not one that forces policies through by coercion," said R. T. (Buck) Philip, international representative of Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers' Union.

●

He accused the federation leadership of attempting to villify former BCFL officers in its report and added that the plans for the bargaining front outlined by Haynes and Staley need much more clarification prior to approval.

Indications of a simmering dispute between the IWA, biggest union in the province, and the building trades unions rose to the surface Tuesday, in a resolution submitted by the IWA condemning Teamsters' Union raiding tactics.

It centres on jurisdiction over hauling of products to construction sites. The IWA claims the right, but the construction unions say it's their responsibility or that of the teamsters, who don't belong to the federation.

The convention was jittery with rumors that the building trades unions with 80,000 members, would pull out of the BCFL if the motion was approved.

The IWA and the building trades unions held a closed session Tuesday afternoon and the woodworkers agreed to withdraw the resolution.

An IWA delegate summed up the mood of Tuesday's convention in regard to the past year:

"It's been a history of repeat. We've been defeated by Bill 33 (The Mediation Commission Act) and I want a report that shows us how to win."

Wage Curbs 'Unfair Burden'

VANCOUVER (CP)—A Canadian Labor Congress executive said today the trade union movement won't be the whipping boy for the federal government on inflation and wants the same controls on prices that already apply to the wage-bargaining process.

Joseph Morris of Ottawa, CLC executive vice-president, told the 14th annual convention of the British Columbia Federation of Labor that proposals made by the federal Prices and Incomes Commission regarding wage levels placed an unfair burden on labor.

"It is obvious that the prime minister is looking for a whipping boy to explain away the economic difficulties he finds himself in," said Mr. Morris.

"Once again it is labor that is the target."

The CLC executive said his organization has persistently sought the fullest possible inquiry into causes of inflation. He said the Prices and Incomes Commission had been charged with this responsibility but had failed to take such action.

The commission has given no evidence of carrying out any of these instructions," he said. "There have been no indications whatsoever that it even attempted to analyze the causes of the difficulties."

CARRY LOAD

Mr. Morris said the commission chose instead to take the easy way out. "It came up with a ready-made remedy and once again it is the workers who are expected to carry the brunt of the load."

The commission had plenty to say about wage levels, but didn't come up with any ideas on executive salaries, professional fees, profits interest rates or real estate speculation.

He cited the collective bargaining process as a means of checking the validity of union wage demands.

The unions are required to justify their proposals through the process and "why shouldn't the people who control prices get the same treatment?"

Using the steel industry as an example, Mr. Morris said the United Steelworkers of America went through months of negotiations with the Steel Company of Canada at Hamilton, Ont., then an 81-day strike to win a wage increase.

"What happened next? The company announced a six per cent increase in its prices. And the union pointed out that because of greatly increased productivity in the industry the settlement would not necessitate a price increase."

Mr. Morris described the Stelco increase as an "inflationary act" that the company failed to justify. "The company officials didn't have to step outside their boardroom—they just arbitrarily slapped on a six per cent increase."

He noted that the commission had agreed to examine the Stelco situation after making it clear that no blame would be allocated.

"The union is pressing for an open inquiry, the employers objected most vigorously and it became clear that this was to be a closed-door inquiry," said the CLC vice-president.
